Peek Lashes Trade Policy Of New Deal And Departs

Denounces Canada Tariff Pact as Unfair to the United States.

Plans Addresses To Warn Country

Says Europeans Profit at Expense of America Under Agreement.

By Robert C. Albright.

Slashing at Administration foreign trade policies, George N. Peek, formerly the President's advisor on foreign trade, last night released a scorching report on the Canadian reciprocal tariff agreement, then severed all ties with the New Deal.

But the storm center of many an AAA and State Department dispute did not leave Washington. Instead, he opened offices in the Investment Building, and announced he would "stay here and fight it out on this line—as an individual."

Joining the steady procession of Government executives who have stepped out of office to do battle against the New Deal from without, Peek will espouse what he calls an "American" bargaining policy, narrowing the present "most-favored-nations" trend.

"Democratic Reversal."

He is open to invitations from both Republican and Democratic executive committees if they seek his views. He will make speeches over the radio and before organizations. He may even appear before Congressional committees. For he lacks sympathy with the Hull-Wallace conception of "Yankee trading" and he wants to tell the country about it.

He started out yesterday by lambasting the Canadian agreement as embodying a direct reversal of the position of the Democratic party as laid down by the President in 1932, and embracing developments "which were not contemplated by Congress at the time of the passage of the Trade Agreements act of 1934."

Yet the Canadian agreement was not the cause of his departure from office, he told newspapermen, implying that the President himself had hastened his leave-taking.

Blames N. Y. Speech.

The "immediate cause," he said, was a speech he made before "my old friends" of the War Industries Board Association in New York on Armistice day, in which he set forth two eight-point foreign policy programs, one for "America" and the other for "internationalists."

"Which do we want," he said in this speech, "to take advantage of our position of geographical and economic security and contribute to world peace and prosperity by developing our own country and by attending to our own affairs, or to contribute our resources and our markets to a common pool in the management of which our's will be but one voice and not the controlling one?"

He accused both political parties of "wavering indecisively between the two points of view, and asserted: "We have straddled long enough. * * * When we Americans choose, let us choose America."

Hastened Resignation.

He said the speech "did not meet with the approval of the President," and this hastened his resignatoin. He added, however, that he had originally submitted his resignation last July, before the Canadian negotiations had proceeded very far, because he lacked sympathy with Administration policies that he said had carried America's share in world trade down from 14.8 to 9.5 per cent. No, he said, the President had not formally "accepted" his resignation, but that was not necessary.

Peek declared he favored a return to the traditional "conditional" form of favored nation policy rather than the "unconditional" policy which permits every major nation except Germany to take advantage of reduced tariffs under reciprocal trade agreements.

"I think we should trade," he said. "And the way to trade is to trade. We should take country by country, and see what advantages we can gain by bargaining in this way. * * * There are now 390 dif-

3 Killed Before Blaze, Bullet in Body Indicates

Wakonda, S. D., Dec. 7 (AP).—Shotgun pellets found in the head of Mrs. Nels C. Jacobsen today confirmed a theory, investigators said, that she, her husband, and son, were murdered before their bodies were burned in a fire that destroyed their farm home.

The authorities assumed that the Jacobsens, reputedly wealthy, were slain by a robber, who set fire to the house to cover up his crime. The charred bodies of the three victims were found early last Thursday.

Wife, 19, Finds Jobless Spouse Hanged With Belt in Jail Cell

Frail, Undernourished Father Commits Suicide After Arrest for Tapping Gas Main When Light, Heat Are Turned Off in Home.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Dec. 7.—Betty May Satti believes in Santa Claus with all the faith of her 3 years. She slept through the night unaware that, this Christmas, there may be neither Santa Claus nor toys.

Police arrested her 23-year-old father, Alfred J. Satti, yesterday afternoon. By 6 p. m. he was dead.

He was found in the police station cell—No. 13—with his own belt looped about his throat, a suicide. His 19-year-old wife, Mrs. Emma Satti, who had come to visit him, discovered the body. Clenched in his fist was a photograph of Betty May.

Satti, weighing but a frail 113 pounds, experienced difficulty in obtaining jobs, Mrs. Satti said. His lack of education rendered him unfit for anything but day labor. Twice foremen of relief projects sent him home as too weak to work with a pick and shovel.

Late last fall, the gas and electricity in the Satti home were cut off—because Satti couldn't pay his bill. Relief checks were intermittent. He could buy no coal. Last January, the baby—their second child—died of double pneumonia.

A month ago, with no funds and jobless, he remembered the cold which caused the death of their other child. He remembered, too, that he must save every penny to

Roosevelt Ends Holiday Toiling On 2 Addresses

Will Reassure Farmers at Chicago; Notre Dame to Confer Degree.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.,
A Staff Correspondent.

Warm Springs, Ga., Dec. 7.—President Roosevelt brought his annual holiday at this recuperative resort to a conclusion tonight by putting the finishing touches on two speeches he will deliver Monday. Both were reported to be of major significance.

The President will leave tomorrow morning for Chicago, where on Monday he will address the American Farm Bureau Federation. He will leave Chicago about noon for South Bend, Ind., to attend a convocation of Notre Dame University, where he will receive an honorary degree and will respond to the conferring of the degree. He is due in Washington Tuesday morning.

The last day of the President's stay here was cloudy and crisply cold. Although he followed his routine of swimming and driving his hand-manipulated automobile around the Warm Springs Foundation grounds, he spent most of the day and evening at his desk, shaping up the two addresses.

On his way to his morning swim the President, in company with his military aid, Col. Edward Watson, drove to Camp Meriwether, a nearby CCC post. After inspecting the camp he told the 200 youths there that he hoped to keep this particular camp "going for for a couple of

District Fears Return to Dole By Thousands

Officials Say 10,000 Face Loss of PWA Jobs After March.

Thousands of men and women who have been shifted from District relief to WPA rolls will be back in the relief line unless there are unforeseen developments, District officials admitted yesterday as they considered ways of getting more money with which to carry the present reduced relief load through the remainder of the fiscal year.

The WPA program is not designed to carry much beyond March 15 and what will be done beyond that date Commissioner George E. Allen, local works and relief administrator, said he did not know.

Present District relief funds plus the $600,000 Congress is to be asked to appropriate will not be adequate to provide relief for all former clients who have been given temporary WPA jobs, Commissioner Allen said.

Ten thousand relief clients, mostly common laborers, have been transferred to WPA jobs so far. Commissioner Allen said he hoped to get the 10,019 total relief cases as of December 1 down to 7,000 before the end of December.

Federal funds totaling $5,560,322 have been advanced so far to carry on the WPA program. Of that amount, all but $1,200,000 has been allocated by local officials to various projects which will expire from time to time. Meanwhile, aside from transfers to WPA jobs,

2 Bandits Shot in Gun Battle With Guards on Armored Car

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Dec. 7.—Two robbers were wounded tonight in a gun battle as a gang of four made a futile attempt to hold up an armored car in the Oak Lane section of North Philadelphia.

One of the holdup men, dressed in a policeman's uniform, was wounded so seriously physicians said he probably will die. Police said he gave his name as Edward Dee.

The other wounded robber was shot in the chest, but managed to escape. The two other robbers fled.

Harry Arnold, jr., 37, who was at the wheel of the armored car when the holdup was attempted, was wounded slightly in the leg in a struggle with one of the bandits.

Arnold, with his father, Harry Arnold, 58, had pulled up in front of a chain store to collect the day's receipts for transfer to a bank when the robbers approached.

The thug in the policeman's uniform pointed a pistol at the elder Arnold. The latter grappled with him. He twisted the weapon toward the robber's chest as the trigger was pulled and the bandit fell with a bullet near the heart.

The other bandits opened fire. The two Arnolds returned the volley. They saw the second robber fall to the ground, then regain his feet and stagger off. The other two robbers ran toward a car parked nearby and sped off.

Detective Heanley questioned Dee later in a hospital and said he had been arrested in Washington about two years ago in connection with a $5,000 pay roll holdup.

Borah Rallies G.O.P. to War 'For Freedom'

Attacks Bureaucracy and Monopoly in Appeal for Constitution.

Arbitrary Powers Quashing Personal Liberties, He Declares.

Taking many a cushioned slap at the Administration, but naming no names, Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, launched a speaking drive last night to "liberalize" the Republican Party, and, some think, to pave his way to the G. O. P. nomination. The Senator spoke from Washington over a national radio hookup.

He struck repeatedly at his ancient foe—monopoly; called for rigid adherence to the Constitution, urged termination of bureaucratic control, and proposed a pitched battle "for free enterprise, free economic system, free America."

"Once the dike of constitutional restraint is opened and the sea of arbitrary power which lies behind is invited in, the inundation of personal rights and personal liberty will be full and complete," he said. "We should strengthen the dike at every point."

Up Before Voters.

Borah is up for re-election next year, if he doesn't "choose" to enter the Republican primaries. He is the senior Senator in point of service, having served for 28 years. Consistently he has refused to deny or affirm reports that he is out for the Presidency in earnest.

On his return from the West, Borah announced he had made up his mind as to what he will do, but wasn't ready to announce it. Immediately, however, he accepted bids to go speechmaking through the East atnd the West, and courted other invitations.

Those who expected him to refer to his plans last night were disappointed. He discussed instead, Government, politics, and business, taking a swing at the status quo in all three.

He referred to the approaching presidential elections as "an event, the most notable in the affairs of the Republic."

Liberty An Issue.

He said:

"We all feel that the coming election is to be one of uncommon interest and of very deep significance. We are discussing Constitutional Government and the preservation of liberty.

"I ask tonight whose liberty? What liberty? The man or group of men who hedge about or control my right to engage in or remain in business are my masters and the masters of my children. The power which fixes the right of things I must have that I may live and clothe and educate my family shapes my course in life and delimits my possibilities as completely as if I were its indentured servant.

"If we are going into a fight on the lines where the battle swings, let us fight for free enterprise, free economic system, free America, free from monopoly control, free from bureaucratic control. The time will not permit a sham fight."

Hails Defeat of NRA.

He took the view that recovery began not with NRA but with its repeal by the Supreme Court, which he said revived confidence "and gave us back something of that freedom of purpose and action without which recovery is impossible."

"The American way, both in business and politics, is, after all, the safest and most effective way."

The theory of overproduction, on

Naval Parity Is Demanded By Japanese

Tokyo Rejects All Other Fleet Issues Until Equality Is Met.

U. S. to Fight Proposal; Delegations Silent as Hope Fades.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 7.—Japan announced flatly today she demanded absolute naval parity with the United States and Great Britain. The announcement threw even more gloom about the International Conference opening Monday.

It was this Japanese demand which caused the breakup of an unsuccessful preliminary conference early this year between the United States, Japan and Great Britain.

To enforce their position, the Japanese said no other question can be discussed until their demand is met. Their country is now on the short end of a 5-5-3 ratio with Great Britain and the United States.

The Japanese position was conveyed to the British admiralty at a conference which the oriental delegation asked specially.

Agreement First.

Japan, the delegates clearly stated, is not prepared to accept any proposals for exchange of a building program unless there is a definite agreement on the question of total tonnages.

The British representatives did not answer the Japanese demands and made no commitments. It was explained at Japanese headquarters that the action was taken because of the feeling the British and others might be under a misapprehension regarding the Japanese viewpoint on a common upper limit of tonnages. By a common upper limit, the delegates explained, they mean an actual, not a theoretical, equality of fleets.

Negotiations between the five Great Powers attending—France and Italy in addition to Britain, the United States and Japan—will either lead to an agreement replacing the Washington and London naval limitation treaties, which expires next year, to a naval building race, observers are agreed.

British to Confer.

The British will confer separately tomorrow with each delegation to lay the groundwork for the talks.

Although a break-up of the parley is freely predicted in some quarters, the complications are so grave they may eventually drive the sea powers together into continued limitation because of fears of the alternative.

The conference, the third naval parley held since the World War, is beset with international complications, including the war in Africa, the Sino-Japanese question and tenseness in Central Europe.

Amreica's delegation, headed by Norman H. Davis, has indicated it is determined not to sacrifice any of the country's interests. The conference is expected to last for several months.

Although the British and American delegations did not express their stands on the Japanese demands, there was every indication that they will continue to oppose a change in the existing status of navies, and will seek to reach a compromise despite the strong Japanese attitude.

Parker Admits He Lacks Proof Bruno Hauptmann Is Innocent

Detective Denounces as Lie Statement of Officials That Originally He Branded Prisoner Guilty; Has Not Conferred With Condemned Man.

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 7.—Ellis H. Parker, chief of Burlington County detectives, reiterated his belief tonight in the innocence of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, but said he has done nothing recently in his unofficial investigation of the Lindbergh kidnap-slaying.

He is interested in the case, he said, "only as an outsider."

"I don't know any more about this case than the man in the moon," he said.

The short, stocky grizzled veteran of 62 whose homicide investigations have given him a national reputation, was interviewed at the Elks Club in Mt. Holly. The gist of his remarks was that he investigates leads brought to him but has nothing tangible on which to conduct an extensive or substantial inquiry into the case.

At one time he said:

"Every newspaper in the land knows I have been working on this thing on my own hook."

Again he said:

"I'm not in this case and I haven't done anything recently."

Parker's name was injected into the headlines by Gov. Harold G. Hoffman two days ago when he disclosed he had visited Hauptmann in his death-house cell on the night of October 17 and at the same time said Parker was independently investigating the crime because he was convinced Hauptmann was innocent.

Parker was asked if he had seen Hauptmann.

"I have nothing to ask him," he replied. "The fellow is in there. I wasn't in this case. I'm only interested as an outsider. Anyone who is a detective can't help it. It's born in him."

Told that an official authority in Trenton had said today that Parker told investigating officials shortly before Hauptmann's trial that he believed Hauptmann was guilty, Parker said:

"That's an absolute lie."

He said he was convinced the kidnaping and the collection of the $50,000 ransom a month later were two separate crimes.

"The underworld already had a

Italian Planes Raze Palace, But Selassie Escapes Injury

Emperor Quits Building Before It Is Wrecked by Air Squadron Pressing Quest for His Life; Doctors Protest as Hospital Is Battered.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Addis Ababa, Dec. 7.—Italian planes, relentlessly hunting down Emperor Haile Selassie and his chieftains, concentrated with their troops at Dessye, bombed the Emperor's war headquaters today for the second time in 24 hours.

Extensive damage was done. The number of new casualties was not announced immediately.

More than 50 projectiles from four planes scored hits on and around the Emperor's palace, virtually completing its destruction. As in the case of yesterday's bombings, it was made the chief target.

Incendiary bombs were included in the projectiles and more fires were started. It was not believed casualtis were great, as the inhabitants were warned when the planes approached and quickly scattered to places of safety.

In addition to attacking the palace, the planes bombed the concentrations of thousands of troops encamped near the town. No troops are in the town proper.

It was believed the death toll from yesterday's bombing was about 40. Many others were wounded.

(The Exchange Telegraph reported that in today's raid 18 Italian planes dropped 7½ tons of bombs on Dessye and vicinity. The American Red Cross Hospital, badly damaged in yesterday's bombing, was again hit and all patients had to be evacuated, the correspondent said.)

As in yesterday's bombing, the Emperor was warned in ample time to seek a place of safety. He was not in the palace during either raid.

The population during the daylight hours keeps mostly to the rocky hills overlooking the town. Newspapermen, although a bomb landed in their camp yesterday, stayed in town. They stuck close to camp because the population

Georgia Court Rules Sedition Law Is Illegal

Negro Red Upheld in Fight on Statute of 1866; State to Appeal.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Dec. 7.—Georgia's insurrection law enacted in 1866 was held unconstitutional today in the case of the Negro communist, Angelo Herndon, and the prospect developed for a test of the statute in the United States Supreme Court.

Superior Court Judge Hugh M. Dorsey found the law invalid because it was "too vague and indefinite." Herndon was convicted under the statute in 1932 after he had organized 1,000 families, 600 of them white, in an appeal for relief, and his punishment was fixed at 18 to 20 years on the chain gang.

Following today's decision Herndon was released under $8,000 bond which will continue in force for 20 days during which the State may appeal. If the State fails to act, he will go free.

Appeal Planned.

Assistant Solicitor General Ed A. Stephens said an appeal probably would be taken immediately to the State Supreme Court. Defense attorneys have announced their intention of carrying the case to the Supreme Court of the United States if necessary. The State appears equally adamant.

Herndon was jubilant as he packed his grips and left the jail. His bond was provided by the International Labor Defense.

"If I go free I will return to New York," Herndon said.

Communist literature was found in his room at the time of his arrest and he was charged with trying to set up a Negro republic in the South.

Judge Dorsey held the insurrection law violated the Constitutions of the United States and Georgia.

Can Enact One.

"If this law as here construed should be held unlawful it will be quite simple to enact one that will fully and absolutely protect the State," Judge Dorsey said.

"Many States have laws that have been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States which give ample protection against doctrines such as Herndon was advocating."

Herndon has been the champion

Nanking Backs Own Free State In North China

Elimination of Japanese Objective 'Indicated' Under Decree.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Peiping (Sunday), Dec. 8.—A new North China State, autonomous in all but name, will be set up by the central government of China Tuesday, it was announced today by Gen. Hsiao Cheng-Ying, governor of Chahar province.

Gen. Hsiao, chief lieutenant of Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan, overlord of Chahar and Hopei provinces, made his announcement to the Chinese press here. It was confirmed by a representative of Gen. Ho Ying-Chin, war minister of the central government, who came here from Nanking for the single purpose of maintaining the sovereignity of China in the north.

General Hsiao said the central government would issue a decree Tuesday establishing a political affairs commission for Hopei and Chahar provinces. It is understood the decree will create a state autonomous in every way but name, inasmuch as the projected North China government will control foreign relations, the salt monopoly and the customs.

General Sung will be chairman of the commission and therefore head of the new state.

Establishment of the new state with the sanction of the central government possibly would eliminate the independent autonomous country which Japan's military leaders have been trying to create from the Provinces of Shansi, Hopei, Chathr, Suiyuan and Shantung. It thus would reward Nanking's desperate effort to retain Chinese control of the rich, vast areas of the northern provinces, save the face of the central government and guard it from charges of being pro-Japanese.

Addition confirmation that the projected Chinese autonomous state has the backing of the central government came from the fact that reports were current in Nanking, the capital, that it would be set up.

Gen. Ho apparently has accomplished the mission for which he was sent here. He has won a number of north China leaders over to his plan, although this probably has not taxed his persuasive powers, because the north China generals,

Telescope 'Eye,' Cooled a Year, Ready to Leave Oven Today

By the Associated Press.

Corning, N. Y., Dec. 7.—With the care accorded by a court jeweler to an exquisite crown gem, picked workmen of the Corning Glass Works tomorrow will remove from its annealing oven the world's largest piece of glass—the 200-inch mirror or "eye" for the world's largest telescope.

Cooling ever since December 2 last year, the huge, 20-ton casting will be taken out of the giant iron oven, in which its temperature has been lowered a degree at a time until it reached room temperature a few weeks ago.

Tomorrow's ceremony will be witnessed by many of those present at the pouring.

After the brick cores that make insets in the "eye" for mounting are removed the mirror must be cleaned with delicate care before it is crated and shipped to the California Institute of Technology. It will make a freight car load valued at $250,000, Dr. McCauley has estimated.

Dr. Walter S. Adams, director of the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson Observatory, who will supervise the four-year task of grinding the disc, has estimated the telescope will disclose objects so distant that light traveling 6,000 billion miles a year would require 400 million years to reach the earth. This is far beyond the power of existing telescopes.

The moon, 240,000 miles away, would be brought to "such close proximity" it would be possible to distinguish a large building," he said.

Nation to Insist on Her 'Rights' in Africa, Premier Says.

Leaves Door Open To Peace Efforts

Deputies Cheer Speech; Oil Embargo Viewed as Critical Step.

By the United Press.

Rome, Dec. 7.—Premier Benito Mussolini warned the powers today that Italy never will submit to sanctions and will continue the conquest of Ethiopia until her minimum demands are met.

While news was being received from Africa of the renewed bombing of Emperor Haile Selassie's headquarters at Dessye, Il Duce thundered his defiance before a cheering Chamber of Deputies.

"On the thirty-fifth day of sanctions, we will have the same courage and the same determination as on the first day," he said.

Declaring that Italy must make her position in Africa clear "once and for all," he continued:

"No coalition can defeat us . . . our counter-sanctions are legitimate defense."

Despite his refusal to back down in the slightest from Italy's demands, Mussolini recognized that peace negotiations are in progress and did not close the door to the prospect that they might succeed, if what Italy regards as her rights are recognized.

No New Obstacle.

Diplomats believed the speech would not make further negotiations impossible, because Mussolini announced no new measure which would complicate the situation. Although he made no concessions, he did not increase his demands.

The fact that negotiations are in progress in Paris between Britain and France was believed to have tempered his speech. He altered its text at the last moment after conferring with Sir Eric Drummond, the British Ambassador, and Count Charles de Chambrun, French Ambassador.

The ambassadors were understood to have told him that the atmosphere in Paris is hopeful. Sir Eric renewed Britain's appeal to him to make peace when he conveyed the text of the speech of Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary, in the House of Commons on Thursday, in which Sir Samuel made an earnest plea for conciliation.

Warning of Duce.

Although he admitted there is a better atmosphere in the international situation, Mussolini warned:

"I feel it my duty once again to warn you against cherishing excessive optimism."

Negotiations are in progress, he said, but meanwhile, "the Italian people, who love facts, will continue to support the advance of its armies, confident of victory."

Mussolini evidently attempted to tell the Italian people that the situation looked better for Italy, but that until something more concrete is available, they should continue their embittered battle against sanctions.

It was believed possible that Drummond and De Chambrun told him there is some chance of delay-

New Deal Girds For Final Test Of Farm Acts

Supreme Court Will Hear AAA, Bankhead Act Cases This Week.

By the Associated Press.

A 171-page defense of the Bankhead cotton production control act was presented to the Supreme Court by the Government yesterday as it prepared to battle this week for the life of the Administration's farm relief program.

The nine justices who unanimously upset NRA will hear arguments tomorrow on validity of AAA processing taxes, in the Hoosac Hills case and the following day on the Bankhead act. Both were intended to boost the income of the American farmer.

Solicitor General Stanley Reed, who will argue both cases for the Government, contended in his Bankhead brief that the cotton act involved no improper delegation of legislative power and that it directly affected interstate commerce. Those were the grounds upon which the court held NRA invalid.

Earlier in the day a fresh criticism and defense of the Administration's farm-aid program flowed into the court.

Briefs Defend, Hit AAA.

The justices, who are expected to decide the farm act's validity in the Hoosac Mills case, were told in two briefs that the legislation should be outlawed. and in a third that it was essential for national welfare.

"The immediate and long-time economic and social interests of the people depend substantially upon the inclusion of agriculture in the general protective system which has been adopted by the United States," the Farmers National Grain Corporation contended.

Representing a number of packing companies which process hogs, William A. Bodine, a Philadelphia attorney, told the court that "To levy the processing tax is as much of an abuse as it would be to lay a tax on pacifists to pay for the building of battleships at a rate measured by their costs."

The contention that the processing tax "limits the buying power of the country as a whole by increasing the price of agricultural commodities to consumers" was made by the Farmers' Independence Council of America.

Their briefs brought to 14, totalling approximately 275,000 words, the number of written arguments in the case brought by receivers of the Hoosac Mills Corporation of Massachusetts challenging the validity of the taxes.

Pepper Opposes Reed

The Federal District Court for Massachusetts upheld the levy but the Circuit Court of Appeals at Boston ruled that the entire act was unconstitutional. Money raised by the tax is used to pay farmers who curtail acreage planted in basic farm products.

The Government will be represented tomorrow by Solicitor General Stanley Reed, who expects to talk two hours in contending that the legislation is necessary to promote the "general welfare" of the United States.

George Wharton Pepper, former Republican Senator from Pennsylvania, will lead the attack for Hoosac Mills, arguing among other things that the legislation constitutes an invalid delegation of power and does not directly affect interstate commerce.

The oral arguments will start late in the day after the court announces decisions in some of the 44 cases that are ready for final action.

On Tuesday, after the Hoosac case is submitted, the court will hear arguments on validity of the Bankhead cotton control act through which the Government taxes the ginning of cotton produced in excess of allotment quotas.

The petition of Louisiana rice millers for a permanent injunction against paying processing taxes under the amended AAA will be argued December 1 and a case involving validity of the Tennessee Valley act, December 19.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kan., Dec. 7.—Mention of Gov. Alf M. Landon as "the next President of the United States" touched off a boisterous demonstration tonight at a rally of Young Kansas Republicans, attended by visitors from 11 other States.

The crowd of more than 1,500 arose, applauding and shouting, as United States Senator Capper of Kansas made the reference.

Landon, in a brief address, made no reference to any presidential aspirations.

He emphasized that the 1936 elections will determine whether Americans wish to "strengthen democratic institutions" or "accept more centralization of power."

"Gov. Landon is the best equipped man in the Nation to lead the Nation back to fundamentals of sound government," Senator Capper said.

"He will be the next President of the United States."

"Returns will show clearly," Landon said, "whether the American people want to strengthen democratic institutions — whether they are determined to maintain parliamentary government—or if they wish to accept more centralization of power."

That choice "will make the 1936 election one of the most important and historically significant we have ever known," he added.

The Governor pleaded for emphasis of issues and not personalities in the coming campaign.

He spoke at a banquet at which Charles F. Taft 2d, of Cincinnati, son of the late former President, and Senator Capper likewise discussed party prospects and issues.

There were visitors from Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Texas, California, Ohio, Iowa, Missouri, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Nebraska and Wisconsin.

Taft predicted social security and relief will be the "most important question of the next campaign." Senator Capper, forecasting a Republican triumph, termed Landon "the strongest man" the party could present.

"Personalities and not issues have unfortunately dominated our political campaigns to too large an extent and frequently it seemed as if both political parties were in the doldrums with little difference in the issues between them," Landon said. "This probably contributed to overemphasis of personalities.

"But this time we are confronted with a dramatic issue. It is the one which has so often flamed up in our national history—paternalism, bureaucracy and centralization of governmental functions into our national life."

The next election has an important meaning for the youth of the Nation, Landon declared.

"It is the coming generations that suffer or benefit by the decisions made and the actions resulting during any era."

Borah Rallies G. O. P. to Battle For Freedom From Bureaucrats

which AAA was reared, Borah attacked as a "libelous deception." Throughout history, he said, overproduction "has been made the scapegoat to carry the sins of economic policies into the wilderness of debts and taxes."

During the boom period culminating in 1929, he said, America was living in "an economic shell," because the "only true basis of a stable economic structure — purchasing power — had in a large degree been reduced to a minimum."

He said industrial liberty must be maintained in order that political liberty be preserved.

"Tyranny Otherwise."

"If a Government says to the citizen, you may not pursue the avocation of your choice; you may may not employ your ability or your industry along certain lines, that would be sheer brutal tyranny regardless of whatever name you gave it and would destroy the last vestige of personal liberty.

"On the other hand, if we permit usurped economic power to say to a citizen, you are in a business which militates against my interests and my profits, therefore you must get out of that business or I will drive you out, constitutional government and political liberty to that individual is a mockery."

He said "nothing could more quickly give employment or insure prosperity than to open the door of opportunity to the ability and the genius of our young men in the business world."

Defends State's Rights.

"It has long been my conviction," he said, "that so long as economic dictatorship has the power to say who shall carry on in the business world, to reduce production, to control output, to fix prices, there is no scheme by which we can restore purchasing power to the people, no scheme by which to restore prosperity."

On States' rights, he had this to say:

"When you propose to wipe out State sovereignty you are not proposing a mere change in our form of Government but you are proposing to destroy it."

AAA 'Destruction' Denied by Wallace

Secretary Tells Religious Leaders to 'Study Up.'

By the Associated Press.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 7.—Leaders in the spiritual, economic and social fields were urged today by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace to familiarize themselves with the mechanics of governmental devices.

He emphasized this point before hundreds of religious leaders in convention here as he took issue with a clergyman who had suggested the abandonment of the present farm program.

The Cabinet member assured the delegates to the seventy-eighth annual convention of the Connecticut Council of Churches and Religious Education that the AAA has not destroyed food and has no intention of doing so.

Holiday Buying Bears Out U. S. Boom Forecast

Retail Sales Throughout Nation Rise With Production.

Holiday buying in the Nation last week continued within the lines of prediction that it would be better than the same period last year by between 10 and 25 per cent, according to the Department of Commerce. Even more encouraging was the outlook in wholesale prices and the movement of unfinished goods and heavy industries which, on the present outlook, point to a sustained recovery for some time to come, according to the department, which based its statements on reports from 32 cities.

Crisp shopping weather in Washington aided in boosting the city's department-store sales to 20.2 per cent over the previous week, and by 20.8 per cent over last year, according to the department. Washington banks started distributing Christmas savings checks totaling $5,279,000, an increase of about 20 per cent over last year's $4,362,000.

Although Washington building permits of $120,500 were off slightly from the previous week, they were 41.8 per cent higher than in the same week in 1934. Out-of-town visitors, as checked by the Smithsonian Institution's registry, were 26,402, as against only 17,785 for last week and 26,722 for the same week of 1934.

Baltimore's seasonal retail trade also registered substantial advances while cold weather increased Christmas savings and better business conditions brought a substantial holiday boom to Richmond. Norfolk department stores reported gains over 1934 sales as high as 25 per cent.

New York Reports Gain.

New York and Brooklyn department stores registered eight per cent gains over last year. Increases in orders for toys were reported. December business on the whole was expected to top that of last year by more than 10 per cent.

Chicago's holiday crowds are larger than any since 1929, while mail order houses also reported heavy demand, according to the department. Electric output for the week was 18.6 per cent ahead of 1934, while 5,549 new automobiles were sold in Cook County, breaking 1929's previous all-time record of 3,353 for the week.

In Los Angeles the Southern California business index stood at 80.2, as compared with 64.1 in 1934, almost $100,000,000 added to Southern California's income from citrus and walnut crops.

New Orleans department store sales were 18 per cent ahead of last year, while building permits were up by 60 per cent.

Uptrend Forecast.

Broader indices point to a continuation of the present favorable trend of industrial activity, according to the weekly report of the Department of Commerce.

Steel ingot production for the week ended November 30 was estimated at 57 per cent of capacity, and future schedules point to a continuance of the climb.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics' index of wholesale prices on November 30 stood at 80.8 of the 1926 average, up 0.2 of a point from the previous week. Wholesale prices were slightly below those of September. Widest gain of all was recorded in residential building contracts. For the year through November 22 these were 84 per cent ahead of the same period the previous year.

Freight car loadings showed a seasonal decline due to the Thanksgiving holiday, and for November will stand at about 64 per cent of the 1923-25 average. Taking the latter years as 100 for the week of November 30, the production of automobiles stood at 109.3; of electric power, 112.7; of petroleum, 135.4, and of steel ingots, 75. The receipts at principal markets stood at 136.2, and of hogs, 35.8.

Ruling by Uncle Sam Makes It Safe to Purchase Potatoes

Housewife Won't Be Fined $1,000 If She Buys Them Untaxed, Unless She Knows the Tariff on Them Hasn't Been Paid.

Housewives will not be fined $1,000 for buying unstamped potatoes at retail, the Government ruled yesterday in what was interpreted as another move to soften consumer opposition to the new control law.

The potato act became effective December 1. It provides for a tax of ¾ of a cent per pound on all potatoes harvested after that date and sold in excess of the national tax-exempt allotment of 326,600,000 bushels. Potatoes sold must be packaged and bear either a tax-exempt or a tax-paid stamp.

Regulations governing sale of the tax-paid stamps were issued yesterday by the Internal Revenue Bureau, which held that the tax provision applied only to the first sale of the tubers, and thereby set at rest previous fears that consumers purchasing at retail also would be liable to prosecution if they bought potatoes which were not stamped.

Retail Sales Exempted.

The National Potato Advisory Committee recently recommended that the act be amended specifically to exempt consumers. The ruling yesterday makes such an amendment unnecessary.

J. B. Hutson, director of the AAA potato provisions, said the majority of the retail sales of potatoes did not come within the scope of the potato act.

"The penalty provision insofar as any consumer is concerned," Hutson said, "applies only to persons who knowingly violate the act by purchasing potatoes which were not taxed at the time of their first sale. This means that a buyer would not violate the act unless he purchased potatoes direct from the grower, while knowing that the grower had not complied with the requirements of the act with regard to packaging and stamping.

Act Is Defined.

"The act says the first sale of potatoes harvested and sold on or after December 1, 1935, shall be in closed containers bearing tax exempt or tax paid stamps. The first sale means only the initial sale by the producer.

"The potatoes sold by retailers do not represent the first sale unless the retailer is also the grower of the potatoes he is selling. Consumers buying potatoes from retailers need have no concern if the potatoes are not in closed and stamped containers. The potatoes need be in such stamped containers only at the time of the first sale.

"Housewives and other purchasers of potatoes for consumption will continue to buy their potatoes in the customary way, unaffected directly by the law."

SEC Data Reveals Teagle and Farish Each Drew That Sum in 1934.

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Commission yesterday made public hitherto "confidential" reports saying that two top officers of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey received salaries of $112,500 each for 1934.

W. C. Teagle, president, and W. S. Farish, chairman, were the men who drew $112,500 apiece. Teagle was paid $73,295 in 1932 and $125,000 in 1929, according to Federal trade commission records. No data on 1933 salaries was available.

Analysis of reports to both commissions shows salaries in industry were generally higher in 1934 than in 1932, through down from 1929.

The 1934 data was filed with the securities commission in connection with registration statements for listing of companies' stocks on exchanges. The commission is now engaged in publishing data which had been held back for some time pending decisions on contentions it should be kept confidential.

Information released yesterday includes:

Independent Pneumatic Tool Co.: Salaries: Neil C. Hurley, Chicago, prseident, $55,127, including $25,127 bonus; Leonard S. Floresheim, Chicago, chairman, $12,000; Edward G. Gustafson, Chicago, treasurer, $21,524. Financial: As of December 31, 1934, gross sales, $2,138,409; cost of goods sold, $748,832; gross profit, $1,389,577.

Church Union Hits Lotteries, Card Parties

Sales, Fairs Also Are Condemned as Substitute for Voluntary Gifts.

The United Stewardship Council of Churches, concluding a two-day annual session here yesterday, served notice on the 25,000,000 members of 35 Protestant denominations that fairs, card parties, lotteries and sales of any kind will be frowned upon as methods of raising church money.

Members of the council, in discussion that led to the adoption of the resolution, deplored the prevalence of such methods of raising money, and decried them as doubtful, pagan, and "substitutes for giving as worship."

"We urge a study and a facing of the whole range of Christian and individual giving," said the delegates, who had come from every section of the United States and Canada, in their formal statement.

Worship Giving.

"We urge all churches of the Lord Jesus Christ, in all their financing plans and methods, to use only worship-giving and not to depend upon fairs, card parties, sales or lotteries of any description as methods of raising church finances."

Delegates at the same time resolved to discourage all "get-something-for-nothing" schemes of poor relief. Although the resolution did not refer by name to any relief plan, council members in their debate protested methods of the Federal Relief Administration in meeting the unemployment problem. They attacked such social aid programs as that outlined in the Townsend Plan.

"It is a matter of Christian principal as well as common sense that no individual can receive something worth while for nothing, without crucial damage to character, both moral and spiritual," said the resolution, "it is our duty to emphasize the fact that to receive or expect to receive money without a proper self-investment in labor is to endanger the Nation, the church and the individual."

Values of Thrift.

A third resolution called upon all churchmen to teach "the enduring values of thrift in order that resources may always be available for times of stress."

Before adjourning members elected the Rev. Herman C. Weber, D. D., of New York, as president to succeed the Rev. Warren Denison, D. D., Dayton, Ohio. Dr. Weber is editor of the American Year Book of the Churches. The Rev. J. N. Darms, D. D., of Philadelphia, is the new vice president, and Dr. Harry S. Myers, of New York, secretary.

The delegates planned for an enlarged meeting next November. Instead of 25 representatives, at least 200 or 300 will attend. The meeting place, to be selected later, will be in the Middle West, it was announced.

Martha Thomas Leaves Estate to Bryn Mawr

Philadelphia, Dec. 7 (AP).—Dr. Martha Carey Thomas, who devoted virtually all her adult life to the development of Bryn Mawr College, made that institution the principal individual beneficiary of her estate. Her will, probated today, assured the college $170,000 of a $200,000 fund which she stipulated as the primary bequest. Approximately $30,000 will provide legacies and annuities for friends and employes.

Dr. Thomas was president emeritus of Bryn Mawr at her death last Monday. As she wished, her ashes will repose in the college cloister.

Private Funeral Held For Princess Victoria

London, Dec. 7 (AP).—Funeral services were held in St. George's Chapel of Windsor Castle today for Princess Victoria, sister of King George, who died Tuesday at the age of 67.

Only members of the royal family, including King George and Queen Mary, King Haakon and Queen Maud of Norway and King Christian of Denmark, and a few close friends attended the services.

United States Ambassador Robert W. Bingham attended a memorial service held at the same time in the Chapel of St. James Palace.

First Heavy Winter Fog Blankets British Isles

London, Dec. 7 (AP).—The entire British Isles, except for a small part of Wales, was blanketed today by the first general heavy fog of winter. Air service was cancelled, forcing Foreign Secretary Sir Samuel Hoare to arrange to go by boat and train to Paris instead of by plane for his conference with Premier Laval.

The fog was so thick at noon that the race meeting at Sandown Park, outside London, was cancelled. London itself was under a complete blackout.

'H. C. O. L.' Group Asks To See the President

Chicago, Dec. 7 (AP).—The United Conference Against the High Cost of Living in a letter to President Roosevelt made public today requested a conference with him Monday on his visit here.

It said it had first called attention to rising living costs in Chicago in June when it sent a delegation to see the President in Washington. The delegation was referred, the letter said, to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, but obtained no satisfaction. The letter said the organization represented 110,000 affiliated members "suffering because of high prices."

Mother of 10 Kills Suitor, Then Self

Tragedy Laid to Jealousy Over Threat to Leave.

By the Associated Press.

Central City, Ky., Dec. 7.—In a jealous quarrel, Mrs. Nora Powell, 43, shot and killed Artie Marthieu, 40, a coal miner, near here late today and then shot herself to death.

The tragedy, held murder and suicide by a coroner's jury, occurred at Mrs. Powell's home 3 miles south of Central City, where Marthieu had gone to visit her.

The woman, mother of ten children, had been separated from her husband. Marthieu leaves a widow and four children.

Estill Crittenden, a relief worker, testified at the inquest he was the only person nearby at the time. He said he was outside repairing the woman's house and that she and Marthieu had been drinknig. Fanlly Marthieu told Mrs. Powell he was going to leave her and the shooting followed.

Philippine Clipper Ready for Flight

Second Plane to Start on Manila Trip Today.

By the Associated Press.

Alameda, Calif., Dec. 7.—The Philippine Clipper, second huge seaplane to enter the transpacific air-mail service, will take off tomorrow on the 16,000-mile round trip to Manila. She rode at anchor today beside her sister ship, the China Clipper, which blazed the trail.

Pan-American Airways had planned to start the Philippine Clipper on her way to Honolulu shortly after the China Clipper alighted on San Francisco Bay yesterday, completing history's first round-trip mail flight across the Pacific hours ahead of schedule.

However, postponement was ordered at the request of Postoffice officials who explained arrival of the ship in Hawaii today would result in week-end delay in delivery of her mail cargo.

The Hawaii Clipper, a third ship to be placed in the transpacific service, will leave Baltimore for Alameda in about a week.

It was then, Mrs. Satti said, he committed the crime for which he was arrested. He tapped gas and electric lines near his home, "illegally diverting" the fuel and power.

Tapped Mains.

A gas and electric company inspector discovered the tapped mains. Police were called. For days Satti crept home after midnight, avoiding officers, hoping to stave off arrest until after Christmas.

Yesterday he obtained another WPA job. In the afternoon he went to a branch relief office to receive a $5 aid check which had been promised him. He was arrested in the office and taken to the station.

A short time later Mrs. Satti appeared. The turnkey, busy with another prisoner, waved her to the cell block, heard her scream as she halted before No. 13. As the body was cut down, the picture of Betty May fell to the floor.

"He'd saved enough to buy two presents—a doll and a doll bed," Mrs. Satti said last night.

Topeka, Kans., Dec. 7.—Three hundred and eighty convicted habitual criminals, marshaled behind the appeal of a Negro chicken thief, looked toward Washington tonight in their hope for freedom from life imprisonment.

The Kansas Supreme Court today upheld constitutionality of the State law, under which the 380 men are in prison for life. Miss Lillie Knight, attorney for Ed Levell, the Negro, said she would take his fight against life imprisonment to the United States Supreme Court.

Levell, 31, was sentenced to life after his conviction on a chicken theft charge, when it was learned his record showed two previous prison terms. Among the 379 other "lifers" are several whose third offense involved minor thefts.

New Effort Made To Spur Seal Sales

Self-Service Boxes to Be Placed Over City.

Self-service boxes and jars will be placed over the city today by the District Tuberculosis Association in an effort to speed up its lagging Christmas seal sales.

The boxes, which will carry a supply, will be stationed in newsstands, at governmental buildings and in all local branches of the Peoples' drug store chain.

Sales booths will be opened later in the week in department stores, banks, and postoffice lobbies, all to be operated by volunteer organizations of women. The Goodyear dirigible will display all week this sign: "Uncle Sam Says, Shop Early —Buy T. B. Xmas Seals."

1 Slain, 2 Shot; Indiana Pushes Bandit Search

State Roads Are Blocked in Hunt for 2 'Hair Tonic Gang' Gunmen.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, Dec. 7.—Two gunmen who shot and seriously wounded two Indianapolis detectives seeking them for questioning in the slaying of an Anderson, Ind., patrolman, were the object tonight of one of the most intense police hunts in Indiana since John Dillinger was at large.

Detective Herbert Fletcher of the city police said the two men were "positively" identified as Paul Pierce, 23, and Donald Joseph, 27, who escaped from the Indiana State Prison Farm October 4.

Fletcher said they were sentenced for robbery in 1930. They had been known here as the "hair tonic bandits" after victims reported a distinct odor during holdups.

County Roads Blocked.

State police blocked all county roads, while city police cruised through downtown neighborhoods.

The gunmen attacked detectives Orville Quinnette and Russell Chatham at a North Side apartment after telling the officers to "come in." They knocked down both officers, then started firing at them with pistols.

Quinnette, struck by five bullets, was taken to City Hospital after his assailants fled. Chatham, wounded in the legs, remained to aid officers pick up the trail.

Four times in the last ten days, Indiana police officers have been fired on without warning.

Motorist Attacked.

Fleeing after today's assault on the detectives, the two gunmen halted a passing motorist, Dr. Edwin Moten, hit him with a revolver butt, tossed him to the ground and took his automobile.

An hour after the shooting, Knightstown, Ind., residents, 40 miles east of Indianapolis, reported an automobile speeding toward Richmond.

State police reported they believed papers found in the apartment here, rented November 29 by a man and woman under the name of D. E. Coleman, established a link with the shooting of Patrolman Frank M. Levy at Anderson November 25.

The papers, relating to insurance, were in an automobile stolen at Anderson a few nights before Levy was killed, and found abandoned later at Newcastle. Another car, stolen at Newcastle, figured in a gun battle between police and gunmen at Richmond a few days later.

In addition to the gunfire directed at Anderson, Richmond and Indianapolis, Capt. Leach recalled, officers at Crawfordsville also were fired on in the last ten days.

The Mahatma is 66 years old. A frail little man, his health has been weakened in recent years by repeated fasts.

Man Gets Job As Wife, Child Die in Despair

Hired as Chef Too Late to Prevent Tragedy; Letters Undelivered.

By the Associated Press.

Schenectady, N. Y., Dec. 7.—Gus Nicholas, 45, unemployed since he lost a $63,000 fortune, wrote his wife and daughter in New York City this week telling them he had landed a job. But his letters went to the wrong address.

Today police told him his wife, Margaret, 32, and their daughter, Iris, 15, had been found dead last night in their gas-filled flat in New York City. Police said they apparently had committed suicide in despair. The mother left a note which read:

"Tessie: I am tired. Gus not home. Don't know where he is. Please send me home to Norfolk, Va. Money is enough."

"Tessie" was the janitress at 109 Madison street, New York, where the Nicholas family lived.

Today the two letters that Nicholas wrote home came back to Schenectady, undelivered. Nicholas had addressed them to Madison avenue instead of Madison street.

A bank book showing deposits of $277 was beside the body. Police also found a money order for $5 telegraphed last night by Nicholas.

Chief of Police William H. Funston, of Schenectady, said Nicholas once was a prosperous candy manufacturer. He lost his money and had no job. Three days ago he came to Schenectady on a truck.

He was hired as chef in a restaurant at $15 a week. Last night he borrowed $5 from his employer and telegraphed it to his wife.

This morning police told him of the tragedy. Frantic, he dashed for a train for New York.

Spies Fail to Get French Air Plans

4 Intruders Drilling Safe Interrupted by Guard.

By the Associated Press.

Lyon, France, Dec. 7.—Four men, believed by authorities to be members of a band of international spies, attempted early today to break into a safe containing mobilization plans for the French air force.

Frightened away by a soldier, the intruders fled from the military air headquarters at Bron Airdrome, near here, only a few hours by motor from the Swiss frontier.

Holes had been drilled in a steel door of the safe when a guard, hearing a noise, investigated. He fired three shots at the men, who disappeared into the darkness, leaving their burglar tools behind.

There were three men in the building, with a fourth apparently waiting at the wheel of an automobile.

The plans which they apparently sought were for the defense of the Lyon industrial area, embracing some of the most important factories in the republic.

Bishop Presides At Cornerstone Program Today

Ceremonies to Be Held at St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church.

An ancient and sacred ritual will take place today at Pennsylvania avenue and Twenty-eighth street southeast, when the cornerstone of St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church will be laid by Most Rev. John M. McNamara, D. D. The ceremony will begin at 3 p. m.

The entire parish and community of Randle Highlands and Twining City, Boulevard Heights, Hill Crest, Benning and Southeast Washington will witness the ceremony. The Rev. Joseph V. Buckley is pastor and founder of the parish.

From an attendance of 32 persons at the first service, the parish has grown to a congregation of 1,200. The Rev. Peter B. Rakowski is assistant to the pastor.

The bishop will be assisted by the Rev. Cornelius Dacey, of St. Paul's, and the Rev. P. E. Conroy, of St. Anthony's, Brookland. Sixty priests and monsignori will attend. Students of the Atonement Seminary of the Catholic University will chant, and the Rev. J. Jenning Clark, of St. Teresa's Church, will be master of ceremonies.

The church itself, which will be built at a cost of $83,000 and ready for occupancy next June, will be reminiscent of Romanesque architecture but modern in spirit.

The exterior of the building will be of buff Bedford (Ind.) limestone, the roof of tile, and the floor of reinforced concrete. The interior will be done in brick work with interest centered upon the sanctuary.

Wallace Property Is Sold at Auction

Iowa Publishing Company Goes for $1,013,000.

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 7.—The James M. Pierce Corporation bought the real estate and personal property of the Wallace Publishing Co. at a sheriff's sale today for $1,013,000.

The sale was to satisfy a mortgage given in 1930 when the Wallace company contracted to buy The Iowa Homestead, a farm paper of the late James M. Pierce.

The Wallace Publishing Co., publisher of the Wallace's farmer, was developed by Henry Wallace, grandfather of Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture.

The Pierce company was granted a deficiency judgment of $1,231,742, the difference between its bid and the mortgage total. There were no other bidders.

Dante M. Pierce, James Pierce's son, named receiver when the Pierce company foreclosed, is publishing the merged paper and lists Secretary Wallace as editor on leave of absence.

CARDINAL O'CONNELL.

O'Connell Assails 'Mercy' Killings

'No Man Has Right to Take Life,' Says Cardinal.

By the United Press.

Boston, Dec. 7.—William Cardina, O'Connell, dean of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy in America, today denounced so-called "mercy killings" by physicians.

"God gave life," the Cardinal said in an interview on the eve of his seventy-sixth birthday anniversary. "No man, not even the doctor, has the human right to take away human life.

"The doctor is called into the sick room to restore health and not to take away life. Under no circumstances should he do other than attempt to bring back health to his patient."

His Eminence, insisting that he was talking as a historian rather than a churchman, said "when there is peace and good will among human beings, there is no need of any trouble."

"The people of this great Nation of ours should have no fear of the European crisis creeping into America. The American people are too sincere. Of course at times they may be sporadic and erratic, but such conditions will never last," he declared.

Bandits Ransack Shop, Make Woman Undress

Chattanooga, Tenn., Dec. 7 (AP).—In a daylight holdup of a dry cleaning establishment, police reported today, Miss Eva Brewer, 30, was forced to take off her clothing at the point of a pistol held by a woman while a male confederate looted the cash register.

They escaped with $13, a woman's coat and Miss Brewer's wrist watch while she dressed before being able to go to the front of the store to give an alarm.

Methodist Unity Program Told To Membership

Bishop Mouzon Confident it Meets Objections Raised at First.

By the Associated Press.

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 7.—Eight million members of three Methodist denominations were offered their first glimpse tonight of a plan that would merge them into one united church.

Bishop E. D. Mouzon, Charlotte, N. C., senior bishop of the Southern Church, made public for the first time basic details of recommendations to unite Southern and Northern Methodists and the Methodist Protestant Church. The entire program will be announced December 12.

"I am confident that this plan will meet all objections raised against the first plan which was defeated," Bishop Mouzon told the fall meeting of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Jurisdictions Mapped.

The Northern Church is the largest of the three existing branches, with a membership of about 5,000,000. There are 2,743,983 Southern Methodists and about 500,000 members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The unification plan would divide the United States into church jurisdictions with bishops elected by each jurisdiction.

A Northeastern jurisdiction would include New England and other States east of the Ohio and north of the Potomac River. The Southeastern jurisdiction would take in all States south of the Potomac and east of the Mississippi River, except Louisiana.

Texas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska would comprise a South-Central jurisdiction. The Pacific Coast States and Rocky Mountain regions would form a Western jurisdiction.

"Christian Unity Step."

Negro members of the entire church would be in a separate division, the Central jurisdiction. They would have the right to join white congregations where such memberships were acceptable. Foreign branches would be separate jurisdictions.

Annual and general conferences would be held as at present.

"Adoption of this plan would be the church's first great step toward Christian unity," Bishop Mouzon said. "Christian forces must present a solid front if we are to break down narrowness and other evils which are threatening our civilization. I believe the Methodist plan will influence other evangelical groups to unite."

Bishop Mouzon was the Southern representative on the three-member commission which drafted the unification plan.

Norman Angell To Be Speaker At Town Hall

Nobel Prize Winner Will Talk on Peace and War at Forum Tonight.

Sir Norman Angell, winner of the 1933 Nobel Peace Prize, will address Town Hall at 8 o'clock tonight at the Hotel Shoreham. His subject will be "Why a World Wanting Peace Gets War." Sir Norman is lecturing in America under the auspices of the Carnegie Peace Endownment.

Former president of one of Lord Northcliffe's newspaper companies, Sir Norman Angell was sent to Parliament in 1929 as a member of the Labor Party. He resigned in 1931 so he would be in a better position to speak with detachment and authority on world problems.

In 1933 he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. He is the author of "The Great Illusion," a widely read plea for peace, and several other books.

Sitting on the panel as questioners this evening will be Representative Timan B. Parks, of Arkansas, a member of the Appropriations Committee; Gen. Paul B. Malone, U. S. A., in charge of the San Francisco Area; Sir Willmott Lewis, Washington correspondent of the London Times; and Frederick Libby, American Council for the Prevention of War.

Pianist Offers Varied Recital In Barker Hall

Winifred McGregor Michaelson, Wilmington, Del., pianist, who recently completed advance studies, gave a recital here last night under the management of a former teacher, Miss Pearl Waugh.

In Barker Hall, Y. W. C. A., she played a program of concert proportions so straightforwardly, so confidently, so unpretentiously that her many friends must have been gratified. They must have regarded her performance as a demonstration of talent already advanced and capable of unlimited growth.

Her Brahms Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Handel told more about her prowess than other numbers on the program. This composition is a long, heavy pull—no load for the effervescent, will-of-the-wisp player. Miss Michaelson found little trouble anywhere along the way, not even in the exhausting climaxes.

Miss Michaelson is crisp, too, when the music isn't too heavy. She presented three sonatas by Scarlatti with more than enough lightness and agility to make them interesting. With Chopin scores, five of which (including the F Sharp Major Impromptu, two Etudes, a Berceuse and the B Minor Scherzo) filled the last part of the recital, the pianist is quite at home. Her healthy attitude toward the keyboard served particularly well in this music J. W.

Strikers on WPA At Key West Yield

By the Associated Press.

Key West, Fla., Dec. 7.—Striking WPA workers, facing Uncle Sam's threat to close down 27 WPA projects, employing 1,500 persons here, voted late today to go back to their jobs.

A hastily called mass meeting heard speakers assert withdrawal of the big WPA pay roll—the city's pipe line of financial life blood since the New Deal rescued it from bankruptcy 18 months ago—might well mean municipal disaster.

Rejected by Films, She Kills Herself

Husband Reveals Despair of Aleta Freel.

By the Associated Press.

Hollywood, Calif., Dec. 7.—Failure to repeat her New York stage success in motion pictures drove Aleta Freel, 28, to suicide early today, her film actor husband, Ross Alexander, told police.

After a quarrel with Alexander, she shot herself in the temple, Detective R. E. Burdick said. She died at a hospital shortly afterward.

Married in 1924, the couple came to Hollywood three years ago from New York, where each had played important stage rolls. Since then, Alexander has become a successful film juvenile leading man. His wife, however, has been unable to obtain recognition in pictures.

Miss Freel's last Broadway appearance was in the play "Double Door," which ended a successful run in 1934. She was the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Freille, of Jersey City.

SEC Requests Court to Limit Utilities' Suits

Action Is Taken to Confine Registration Litigation to One Test Case.

Besieged with suits challenging utility act validity and asking court injunctions against enforcement, the Securities and Exchange Commission struck back yesterday in a sudden move to confine litigation to one test case it has picked itself.

In a joint motion filed by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings and commission counsel, the District Supreme Court was asked to stay all action on seven utility company injunction suits, until the constitutionality of the act has been determined.

The commission already has filed suit against the Electric Bond & Share Co. and five holding company subsidiaries to compel them to register. It asked the court yesterday to delay injunction action until the E. B. & S. case has been finally settled by the highest court.

At the same time, Attorney General Cummings ordered all district attorneys to advise all courts that the Government will not intervene in utility stockholders suits involving the utilities act. He questioned whether such suits "are brought in good faith and are free from collusion."

Barrage of Suits.

The commission's move to hold up injunction action until a speedy test can be had of the law's validity, came as the SEC faced a barrage of some 48 suits by 147 complaining holding companies in at least 10 different courts.

Seven have been filed in the District Supreme Court alone, and the commission chose these in its move to stay action.

The motion filed yesterday emphasized the Government's anxiety to secure an early determination of the constitutionality of the act.

"This suit of the Securities and Exchange Commission against Electric Bond and Share Co., et al., will be prosecuted with all due diligence to secure from the Supreme Court promptly an authoritative determination of the validity of the essential features of the act," read the motion.

"No public interest will be served by pressing for a decision of this issue in a multitude of suits. On the contrary, such a course of action will tend to clog the courts, overtax the facilities of the Government, and make against that orderly and economical disposition of the controversy that is the Government's aim."

It was the second legal move the Government had made to defend the act, although the commission has several times revised its regulations to safeguard the legal and Constitutional rights of registering companies, as an inducement to compliance with the law.

Fearing that their rights would be impaired, the majority of the companies have preferred to seek protection from the courts. Recently, the SEC and Attorney General Cummings had promised there would be no immediate criminal prosecutions for failures to register, while Postmaster General Farley has ordered that no action be taken to deprive the non-complying utilities full use of the mails, at least until the constitutional issue is settled.

Farley Issue Expected.

Yesterday's move by the Government, indicating a desire to hurry a test case to the highest tribunal, might mean a decision by the Supreme Court in the next three or four months, it was said.

Attorney General Cummings' instructions to District attorneys yesterday followed a recent wrinkle in the utilities' fight on the act. Instead of the holding company itself asking a court to restrain the Government from enforcement, stockholders in several instances have sued to restrain the holding company from registering.

In stating that the Government will not intervene in such cases, Attorney General Cummings reiterated his opinion that registration in itself would not endanger the legal rights of utilities.

"In light of the action taken by the Government to safeguard the rights and interests of both registering and non-registering companies, it may be questioned whether such stockholders' suits are brought in good faith and are free from collusion as is required under equity rule 27 as interpreted by the Supreme Court," the Attorney General said.

Holding companies which have filed suits for injunction in the District Supreme Court, action on which the SEC is seeking a stay, include the North American Co., American Water Works and Electric Co., Inc., the United Light and Power Co., the United Light and Railways Co., Continental Gas & Electric Corporation, American Light & Traction Co., and the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

Peek Lambasts New Deal Trade Policy and Quits

ferent agreements between other nations, benefits from which do not accrue to us. They trade with each other."

On the basis of business done in 1929, he estimated American tariff concessions involved in the Canadian Treaty covered imports of $307,894,400, while Canadian concessions in rates on goods shipped here affected only $244,653,000. Again on a basis of 1929, he said, American concessions involved 83.8 per cent of our imports from Canada of agricultural and forest products, but Canadian concessions affected only 22.6 per cent of American shipments of these products to Canada.

"In substance," he said, " this results in giving Canada an increased share of our markets for agricultural and forest products, in the expectation that certain of our industries will obtain larger markets in Canada for their products, especially of productive machinery."

The "reason" given that this would build up American purchasing power for its own farm products, he said "is precisely the theory upon which three Republican administrations acted during the twenties when American agriculture progressively declined."

"General Tariff Cut."

Emphasizing that under the unconditional most-favored-nation principles, our concessions in tariffs to Canada must be extended virtually to every other nation, he said the net result means "a general reduction of the tariff."

"It has been minimized or obscured in some instances, notably in the case of the Canadian agreement, by the skill with which our negotiators have in part nullified the operation of the most-favored nation principle through the selection of commodities supplied solely by one nation, by "trick" classifications, by employment of quotas, and by inclusion of 'escape' clauses," he said.

"Nevertheless, sufficient of the unconditional principle has remained to make the substantial effect of the tariff concessions in the individual agreements one of general tariff reduction in exchange for scattering concessions from the countries concerned. One has only to point to items such as the inclusion of Scotch and Irish whiskies in the benefit Canadian agreement to see how this operates."

How Others Benefit.

Among the examples he gave of the concessions which directly benefit other nations from which we have not received concessions were:

Ferrimanganese, the reduced duty on which in the Canadian treaty is automatically extended to France, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, the United Kingdom, without securing reciprocal concessions in return.

Cobalt and cobalt ore, bound on the free list in the Canadian agreement, although our chief sources of the product are Belgium, South Africa and Germany. Canada furnishes less than 10 per cent.

Although there was a 50 per cent reduction on cobalt oxide, the United States imported only $258,000 worth in 1934, none of which came from Canada, and so far this year it has imported none from Canada.

"Nothing in Return."

Peek pointed out that only about half of our whisky imports come from Canada, yet the Canadian agreement provides a 50 per cent reduction in the duty on all types of whisky aged not less than four years. Giving nothing in return, the United Kingdom, Irish Free State, Cuba, Bermuda and other countries would benefit by the reduction.

The political significance of Peek's open declaration of warfare was not underestimated here. He has long been identified with the farm movement, and his objections to some of the "internationalist" policies of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Secretary of State Hull are shared by others in the Roosevelt camp.

He is expected to strive for congressional revision of the Hull-Wallace policies, although he shied away from the question. He likewise declined to say whether he would support President Roosevelt for re-election, but insisted there was nothing of "partisanship" in the policies he espoused. Asked if he would support the export debenture or other proposed farm plans, he said he was convinced that under present world conditions, no "general plan" would work.

Points Way to Retreat.

In the conclusions to his report, he hinted the President should consult Congress if he continues a general reduction in tariff rates, regardless of the "technical authority" granted him.

"The question may be raised," he said, "that the Canadian agreement already has been proclaimed by the President. Under the act of 1934:

" 'The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part.'

"Will he avail himself of this authority? Will he consult Congress?"

He pointed out in his report that whereas in 1929 our trade with Canada showed a visible export surplus, in 1934 and during the first nine months of 1935 our imports from Canada, including gold and silver, exceeded our exports.

Widow of Cab Victim Wins $10,000 Verdict

Mrs. Mary N. Picillo, widow of Michael Picillo, 915 New York avenue northwest, yesterday in the District Supreme Court was awarded a verdict for $10,000 against the Independent Taxi Owners Association because of his death from injuries allegedly sustained when he was run down by a cab at Fourteenth street and New York avenue in 1933.

Mrs. Picillo said her husband was fatally injured when a cab driven by Edward Sutton struck him as he was crossing the intersection. Sutton, she said, was a member of the association controlling the cab. Her attorney was Franklyn Yasmer.

S.C. Assembly Session Called In Road Clash

Governor Seeks Temporary Laws After Ousting Highway Chiefs.

By the Associated Press.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 7.—Gov. Olin D. Johnston tonight announced he was calling the South Carolina Legislature into extraordinary session at noon Tuesday "to consider the necessary temporary legislation to allow the highway department to continue to operate."

The Governor said his action was taken so that highway affairs might be administered "until such time as legislation is passed that will allow the people of South Carolina to select at the ballot who is to serve as highway commissioners."

His announcement followed within less than 24 hours his removal of three commissioners and suspension pending hearings of Chief Commissioner Ben M. Sawyer and ten others, constituting the entire executive administration of the road bureau except for a single Johnston appointee to the commission.

The Governor first ousted the Commission with troops in a coup and suspended members for alleged misconduct after the court reaffirmed their legal right to authority Thursday.

A Lift for Policeman Bad Luck to Autoist

Yonkers, N. Y., Dec. 7 (AP).—Patrolman Paul Both found himself in a rather delicate position today, but he saw his duty and did it.

Patrolman Both was shivering on a street corner when a passing motorist, Donald Welch, offered him a lift. In front of the police station, the patrolman debarked and then he noticed the license number of the car.

He felt compelled to invite Welch into the police station because they had all been seeking Welch for some time on a nonsupport warrant.

To make it worse, Welch didn't have his driver's license with him, so Patrolman Both had to book him on that charge as well.

Catholic Clubs Urged to War On Radicalism

Union of Sodalities Here Adopts Resolution Against 'Reds'

A resolution urging that Newman Clubs in non-Catholic universities and high schools be enlisted in a common crusade against Communism was adopted yesterday by the Union of Washington Sodalities.

Ignoring the campaign for decency in motion pictures, which was the major topic last year, the Sodality Union devoted its entire discussion to present-day communistic tendencies.

The convention was held at Georgetown University. It was attended by 200 delegates from colleges and high schools.

Communism and Catholicism are the only two revolutionary movements in the world today, the group was told by the Rev. Daniel A. Lord, S. J., national organizer of Sodalities and a leader in the Catholic youth movement.

Points Out Differences.

"The Communist is a stuffed shirt," he said, "simply because he is convinced that a small minority of the proletariat must control and regulate and dominate the great mass of mankind.

"The Catholic believes that men can be educated to manage their own property and care for their own government. The Communist believes that only the state can handle production and property. The Catholic believes that production and property should be distributed among as many people as possible."

The convention was held in connection with the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the Sodality of Our Lady Immaculate at Georgetown, the pioneer Sodality in the United States. The anniversary will be marked by religious services today. New candidates will be formally received tonight.

Dr. O'Leary Speaks.

John B. Ross, prefect of the Washington students' branch of the Georgetown Sodality, opened the discussions at the afternoon sessions when the students mapped a plan of action against communism. A representative committee of the union will be appointed to enlist the aid of Newman clubs.

The committee on arrangements which assisted the Rev. Vincent S. McDonough in preparing the two-day program consisted of the following Sodality officers: Frances E. Hickey, assistant director; James Curtin and John B. Ross, prefects; Vincent Beatty and Paul T. O'Donoghue, secretaries, and James S. Kernan, jr., and William S. Abell, treasurers.

$1,285,000,000 FederalPayRoll Near War High

Almost 800,000 Receive Wages or Salaries From Government.

By the Associated Press.

For the last year wages and salaries of Government workers alone have cost Uncle Sam more each month than it did to operate the entire Government, including the Army and Navy, for any whole year before the Civil War.

At the same time statisticians pointed out that the population of the United States increased about four times from 1860 to 1935, while the purchasing power of the dollar decreased markedly with a consequent rise in weekly wages during that period.

The increased cost was further explained by the world-wide tendency for government to add to its functions and to extend the sphere of federal influence on a broad scale.

World-War Peak.

But, official figures gathered from several sources disclosed yesterday, the total of Government employes is still more than 100,000 below the World-War high of civilian employes. They reached a World-War peak of 917,760. They now stand a little under 800,000.

The average of the monthly pay rolls from October, 1934, through the same month of 1935 has been well above the $100,000,000 mark.

The average ordinary expenditures of the Federal Government, a technical way of saying how much it cost, including Army and Navy, stood at $60,162,000 a year in the decade before the Civil War guns began to speak out in 1861.

In the year from November, 1934, through October, 1935, the payroll of the Federal Government totalled $1,285,141,699.

It was not until the United States stepped out into the World War in 1917 that the ordinary running expenses of the entire Federal Government passed the billion mark. In 1916, it was $734,056,000.

No comparative figures on the amount of these total running expenses that went to payrolls is available before November, 1933. Only sparse figures are listed in the records to show how many employes the Federal Government had before the Civil Service Commission started its work in the 1880's.

Statistics gathered by the Commerce Department, however, list the number of Federal employes in 1816, just 16 years after the Government had moved into its permanent home in Washington, at 6,327. There weren't many governmental departments then and the city of Washington was still a town setting on the edge of a marsh.

In 1861, when the Civil War broke out, the number of Federal workers had grown to 49,200. Thereafter, came a fairly steady growth. By 1881, four years before the Civil Service came into existence, there were 107,000; in 1901, 256,000; in 1911, 370,000; in 1913, 445,605.

The figure stayed below the half million mark until the bands began to play "Over There" in 1917 when it jumped to what thus far has been an all time high of 917,760.

A graph of Government employes reaches a sharp, alpine peak here. Then, during the close of the Wilson administration and throughout the Harding administration the line points downward. By 1923, it had reached 515,772.

Under Coolidge, the graph pointed slightly upward, flattened out, then began to rise again. The rise continued under the first years of Hoover to reach 588,206 in 1931. Then it began to shrink and in 1933 had come to 572,091.

President Ends Holiday Toiling On 2 Addresses

more years." He praised them for the service which he said they were rendering to the community and State and reiterated his desire to make the CCC permanent.

Mr. Roosevelt's speech to the Farm Bureau Federation is expected to be a casting up of accounts of what the AAA has done for the farmers of the country and a defense of that part of the New Deal.

In Atlanta the President briefly contended that much of the improvement in economic conditions the country over came from increased farm purchasing power resulting from higher prices for agricultural products. He is expected to elaborate on this contention Monday.

Some significance attaches to the President's address to the farmers because he will speak only an hour or so before the Supreme Court begins to hear arguments in the famous Hoosac Mills case, in which the AAA processing taxes have been challenged as unconstitutional.

To Reassure Farmers.

Whether the President will reveal what alternatives he has in mind, should the processing taxes be outlawed, is not known. But it is held certain that he will give assurances to the farmers of the Nation that his Administration will make good on all acreage reduction contracts and that ways will be found within constitutional limits to continue the AAA.

Mr. Roosevelt also is expected to defend the Canadian reciprocal trade agreement which has been under fire from various farm interests. If he does, he undoubtedly will follow the general lines of the State Department analysis of the agreement which the President read at a special press conference the day details of the pact were disclosed. This statement, it is agreed, covered the ground as adequately and forcefully as it can be.

Some hint of agricultural proposals the President has in mind for the next session of Congress also may be given in this speech. It is known that he is seeking ways of reducing the cost of farm financing and that he would like to see the Bankhead farm tenant bill—which sets up a $1,000,000,000 revolving fund for loans to help tenants purchase land and equipment—adopted.

Notre Dame Address.

The President's address at Notre Dame has been a subject of some mystery for several days. At first it was believed Mr. Roosevelt's remarks in accepting from this university an honorary degree would be confined to the pleasantries usual on such occasions.

But today there were intimations that this address should be ranked as a major Presidential utterance and that it may exceed the farm speech in national importance. However no hint of the contents of the speech could be obtained.

The occasion is the third convocation in Notre Dame's history, this time to mark Philippine independence. Previously, Notre Dame has held convocations in honor of Marconi, the inventor of wireless telegraphy, and Gilbert K. Chesterton, the English author.

One bit of speculation here regarding the Notre Dame speech was that it might deal with the unsettled conditions in the Far East and that the President, taking a cue from the purpose of the convocation, might warn the world that this country is still interested in the Philippines and in the maintenance of peace in the Pacific. But this could not be confirmed.

Another possibility was that the President may express sympathy for those being persecuted for religious beliefs in Mexico, Germany and elsewhere. Mr. Roosevelt has been criticized in Catholic circles for failing to speak out against persecution of Mexicans of that faith—indeed, on that score Notre Dame has been criticized for honoring the President.

District relief rolls are increasing. During October, the last month for which complete figures are available, there was only a net decrease of 1,394 in relief rolls.

Commissioner Allen has ordered the December cut in relief payments restored January 1. It is estimated that some additional $600,000 will be required to carry this rate of expenditure through the balance of the fiscal year. For next year, Commissioner Allen said, he would seek an appropriation of $3,200,000. This year Congress appropriated $2,000,000. In the estimates for 1937 the sum of $1,700,000 now is provided.

Payment Questioned.

Although the average relief payment has been estimated at $30 a month, officials deprecated that figure as giving a true picture, and Leroy Halbert, chief of the statistical division, made public additional figures.

The average monthly payment to families on relief was $39.17 to the December cut. The reduction will bring the average down to $29.38 this month.

The average payment to single persons was $11.09 prior to the cut. The reduction will bring the average payment down to $8.32 during December.

Including all single persons on relief the average family is 2.61 persons. Excluding single persons, the average size of a family on District relief is 3.68 persons.

A study made by Halbert shows that out of 14,984 persons certified by relief officials for WPA jobs, 2,500 would receive less each month than they had been given on relief rolls. These were common laborers, for the most part, whose WPA security wage is a maximum of $45 a month. These 2,500 received on relief an average relief payment of $58 a month, Halbert said.

Relief executives are in agreement with spokesmen for a group of civic and welfare organizations who called on the Commissioners on Friday and warned that the 25 per cent cut in payments would mean "slow starvation" for many.

"Conditions are deplorable," Halbert agreed. He said he was basing his estimation not only on the previous economic condition of those on relief, but on an estimate of what were the minimum necessaries.

Notice of Presidential approval of two more projects was received during the day. One was for $106,164 for a traffic survey, on which 149 persons would be employed. Another was for employment of 11 persons for a brief time for refurbishing the United States marshal's office at a cost of $1,199. But no money was allocated for the projects. A Treasury warrant for $11,700 for a project for employment of writers was received.

Effort to extend the free school lunches to needy children in parochial schools is to be made by Commissioner Allen. Lunches now are being served in the public schools. There should be no distinction among the needy, the Commissioner said, adding that legality of the proposed extension had been established.

Chest Funds Limited.

Funds subscribed in the recent Community Chest campaign will not permit an attempt by its agencies to meet relief needs, Herbert L. Willett, jr., director of the organization, announced yesterday.

Even without entering the relief field, he said, the Chest will be faced with a deficit.

"In response to a request from Commissioner George E. Allen," Willett explained, "the Chest agreed to cooperate in the relief situation by conducting a 120 per cent campaign this fall.

"The minimum goal of the Chest, based on the actual needs of its 65 agencies as determined by the budget committee, was set at $1,877,900. The 120 per cent campaign, had it been successful, would have raised approximately $400,000 additional for relief.

"Much as we should like to help, the fact remains that the Chest does not have the money."

New Evidence Promised to Aid Edith Maxwell

Ruling Is Expected Thursday on Motion for Murder Case Rehearing.

By Virginia Lee Warren.
A Staff Correspondent.

Wise, Va, Dec. 7.—Defense attorneys for Edith Maxwell made plans today to introduce several new witnesses at the 21-year-old school teacher's next trial for the murder of her father, if Judge H. A. W. Skeen rules favorably on their motion to set aside the former verdict.

The defense motion will be heard Thursday. Judge Skeen has indicated he will announce his decision immediately after the hearing of briefs. It will be delivered in the same oversized courtroom, where Edith was sentenced almost three weeks ago to 25 years in the penitentiary.

Announcement by the three defense lawyers concerning their intention to produce new witnesses at the next trial followed a statement by Commonwealth's Attorney Fred B. Greear yesterday in Richmond that he is developing new evidence for use when the Maxwell girl's mother, Mrs. Anne Maxwell, is tried in March for complicity in the patricide. He declined to divulge the nature of this evidence.

If Judge Skeen grants Edith a new hearing it will be in March at the next term of the circuit court.

Character Witness.

Edith's lawyers, A. A. Skeen, R. P. Bruce and W. W. Dotson, admit they may have difficulty in getting persons to appear as character witnesses at the next trial. It would have been easy at the first one. But now sentiment here is so bitter against the girl and her entire family that those who were once friendly toward the Maxwells are almost afraid to admit it.

No one felt particularly sorry for Edith Maxwell when the jury of mountaineers brought in a verdict of first-degree murder and the judge sentenced her to 25 years in the penitentiary. The general opinion was: "It's certainly a lesson in what's sinful."

The crowd in the courtroom heard the young school teacher tell how she struck her father on the head with a slipper one midnight last July when he tried to whip her and threatened to break her neck for staying out after dark with a neighbor boy. The crowd also heard Edith's mother and little sister, Mary Catherine, corroborate her story of self-defense.

Unsympathetic Ears.

To those Wise County mountaineers and their families, jammed in the courtroom from 8 in the morning until long past supper time, the self-defense plea fell on unsympathetic ears. Edith Maxwell had dared to strike back at her father, Trigg Maxwell. And Trigg Maxwell died that same night. So far as this community was concerned the 25-year sentence was more than "a lesson in what's sinful," it was justice.

Wise County prepared to forget Edith Maxwell. It would see her off to the penitentiary, and then go about its usual business of mining, farming, and storekeeping.

Then, to the amazement of everyone here, people beyond the rim of the high mountains which surround this community began demanding another hearing for the pretty, dark-haired school-teacher. They began writing letters, raising funds, adopting high-sounding resolutions. That began to crystalize sentiment against the Maxwells.

The family is blamed for this sudden focusing of attention upon the way justice is administered here. Enmity is now assuming the proportions of a feud. On one side is Wise County. On the other are the Maxwells and "those meddling outsiders." And so those who were once so friendly to Edith are now strangely silent.

Not Asked to Testify.

At the time of the first trial, 22-year-old Raymond Meade, the neighbor boy who drove the Maxwell girl to her home in Pound that fateful night in July, wondered why he was not asked to testify in behalf of Edith. He had said he didn't believe she intended to kill her father, that she was a good girl and certainly did nothing wrong the night of the trouble.

Before the jury brought in its verdict, Raymond left the courtroom. He couldn't bear it inside, he told Edith's brother, Earl. When word of the first degree verdict was brought to him, pacing outside the courthouse, he wept.

Today Raymond, big, blond and rosy-cheeked, refused to discuss the case. He said at his home on the road between here and Pound that he "didn't want to hear another word about it;" that he "didn't want to get mixed up in it."

Edith Maxwell Defense Fund Rises to $560

Hill Resident Sends $5 Gift and Letter Attacking 'Unjust' Verdict.

Out of the mountains of Virginia has come a powerful letter, written by a man who knows the language of the hills, but refuses to agree with their concept of justice—the concept which closed the doors of the Wise County jail on Edith Maxwell because she rebelled against her drunken father and hit him with a shoe heel, a blow from which he later died.

L. L. Pound, of Elkwood, Va., who wrote the letter, sent with it a $5 check for The Post's defense fund for the mountain school teacher. He said the money was what he had received for grinding 1,000 pounds of corn. His contribution, together with others received yesterday, brings the total up to $560.73, sent in the last two weeks by persons who believe Miss Maxwell was "unjustly sentenced."

Excerpts from Pound's letter follow:

"In regards to the Maxwell case, I will say that a man has a right to say how his own household shall be conducted. And I further say that children should obey their parents. But when a child becomes 21 years of age a parent has no more authority over her than he has over anyone else . . .

"Now this girl (whether she had done right or wrong) found herself in a death trap with the probability of being sent into eternity in less time than it takes to tell it, by the hand of an infuriated liquor drinker . . . and if the good Lord had not directed the shoe heel as he did the stone from David's sling that slew the giant, and if Trigg Maxwell had not been killed in the tussle, he should have deserved to have been tried for murder instead of the girl.

"Therefore I am enclosing a check for the small sum of $5 with the hopes that enough will be added to it to secure a fair trial for the girl and move the family to some civilized section of this country that is supposed to be the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Educators to Mark Harris Centenary

More than 300 national educational leaders will meet in the Mayflower tomorrow night to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the birth of William Torrey Harris, one of America's outstanding educators.

Speakers at the 7:30 p.m. dinner will include Philander P. Claxton, former U. S. Commissioner of Education; and Payson Smith, commissioner of education for Massachusetts. Commissioner John W. Studebaker will preside.

Harris was Federal commissioner of education for seventeen years after his appointment in 1887. He was a philosopher of considerable reputation, although he is remembered among educators chiefly for his part in introducing kindergarten and vocational education in this country. As superintendent of schools in St. Louis, Mo., and acting later on national committees, he had a large part in the reorganization and improvement of the school curriculum.

Parker Admits Lack of Proofs Bruno Hauptmann Is Innocent

copy of the ransom note and could have bought a sleeping garment and written the other notes," he said.

Parker said he believes Hauptmann got the ransom money, found in his possession, from the late Isador Fisch, the German furrier who was his business partner and who died in Germany early in 1933.

He said he was chiefly interested in the case because he was afraid a mistake had been made, and that if Hauptmann is electrocuted something "might turn up."

"That would do more to break down justice than anything else in the world. I have no more interest in this fellow than in any other fellow," Parker said. "It's just a question of fairness with me. Just a personal opinion."

He said he based his opinion on Hauptmann on the State's case, which, he held, was "full of holes."

Governor's Position.

Meanwhile, speculation flared anew on the Governor's nocturnal visit to Hauptmann's death-house cell, for it was recalled that on October 28, 11 days afterward, the Governor, in a formal statement, outlined the procedure for the condemned man's electrocution, "when and if" it takes place.

This statement directed that only a limited number of witnesses be present and the execution be carried out "with the dignity and the solemnity of the occasion."

The day brought other developments:

Gov. Hoffman emphasized Parker's activity did not mean he had reopened the case; denied the new investigation had brought arrests; refused to assay the value of the information he has received from the detective; declined to discuss his own opinions in the case, and said his interest was not "a publicity stunt."

Papers Rap Hoffman.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, father of the murdered child, the New York Post said in a copyrighted article, does not take the Parker theory seriously because it is unsupported by tangible evidence. Lindbergh is "morally certain Hauptmann did a one-man job," the newspaper said.

Hoffman's death-house visit to Hauptmann drew sharp criticism in the editorial columns of some State papers. The expression "Politico-Publicity" was used to describe the latest turn of events in the Lindbergh case. One paper called the visit "most abhorrent" and a "stunt, more adapted to the circus ring, than to the governorship." Another spoke of "superficial publicity seeking and a gubernatorial flare for Broadway theatricals."

Attorney General David T. Wilentz, chief of the Flemington trial prosecution, and Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, State police superintendent who directed the kidnap investigation, refused comment on the latest events.

Court May Rule On Hauptmann Plea Tomorrow

His Review Petition Among 28 Believed Considered Yesterday.

By the Associated Press.

The Supreme Court generally was assumed to have reached a decision late yesterday on whether to grant Bruno Richard Hauptmann's request for review of his conviction of kidnaping and murdering the Lindbergh baby.

Whatever action was decided upon, if any, will not be announced until the court meets at noon tomorrow after a two weeks' recess. Usually petitions for review are decided with a one-word statement, either "granted" or "denied." The statement is not read aloud in the court room, but is handed to the clerk by Chief Justice Hughes.

The Hauptmann petition was one of 28 before the court for probable discussion at its regular Saturday conference. These conferences are held to permit the justices to decide which cases they will pass on and to vote on those that have been argued.

Ordinarily, an announcement is made the following Monday on all applications for review placed before the justices at the informal Saturday meeting. This procedure can be changed, however, if the justices so desire.

Recent developments in New Jersey in the celebrated case have no bearing on any action taken by the justices. They do not take judicial notice of anything that has happened in the case since the Bronx carpenter was convicted at Flemington and that verdict was affirmed by the Court of Errors and Appeals, the highest State tribunal.

Should the Supreme Court announce it would review the case, arguments would be held probably in February or March

Boaster Sought By Detectives In Loring Crime

Offered to 'Talk' for Reward, but Vanished When $500 Was Posted.

A Mount Rainier man who boasted he would "talk" when a reward was offered, and who disappeared after a $500 reward was posted, was being sought last night by police investigating the murder of Corinna Loring, 27-year-old bride-to-be.

The man promised to reveal his "information" ten days ago in a conversation with Policeman George Giddens. He insisted, however, that he would wait until the authorities made it worth his while.

Last Tuesday the Prince Georges County commissioners offered $500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of Corinna's slayer or slayers.

Since then the Mount Rainier police have been trying in vain to find the man who talked to Giddens. It was suggested that he may have disappeared because he was afraid his bluff would be called.

Lieut. Joseph H. Itzel, Baltimore detective in charge of the investigation, returned to his home for the week-end yesterday, after interviewing one of Corinna's former suitors, Earl Bass, of Mount Rainier.

Invalid Mother Asks for Toys For Her Girls

Gifts Wanted for Little Housekeepers 'Who Do Not Complain.'

Christmas will be a dreary day for at least two little girls who "do not complain" about their misfortunes, unless The Washington Post Toy Fund is swelled by voluntary gifts.

As numerous donations of toys and cash were received yesterday, The Post was flooded with letters from persons whose children must count on a generous public for their Yuletide playthings.

Outstanding was the note from an invalid mother who asked that her daughters be remembered.

Bad Times This Winter.

"We have had very bad times this winter," she wrote.

"I am not able to walk, but can tell my little girls, 10 and 12 years of age, how to keep our home neat and clean, and cook our meals.

"It is hard to make both ends meet on my husband's wages of $15 a week. The doctor who attends me does not charge anything, but there is no money for Christmas.

"I so want my good little girls, who do not complain, to have some toys this year."

Another mother wrote:

"My little girl is looking for Santa and my husband has been out of work for a year, and she will not have anything for Christmas unless someone is kind enough to help us with toys."

A Helping Hand.

An equally urgent request from a third mother read:

"I have two little girls, 3 and 5 years old. Their father is dead and they want Santa to bring them some toys. I guess they will be disappointed unless we find a helping hand."

A mother with a brood of six youngsters wrote:

"Unless they are remembered by you they will not have a happy Christmas, and they are looking for Santa Claus to come."

Mrs. George Eckles, of the Sergt. Jasper Post of the American Legion, requested toys for 50 children of needy World War veterans, who will be entertained at a party December 20 in Powell Junior High School.

To Distribute Baskets.

The legion already has arranged to distribute baskets of food and clothing among the families of the destitute veterans.

A group of students from George Washington University, busy preparing Christmas baskets of food for 200 poor families, an annual undertaking, asked for 500 toys to brighten the lives of underprivileged children.

A student explained:

"The delight of the children when they found toys from The Washington Post Toy Fund in their stockings last Christmas morning was indeed joyous to witness."

Gifts of either toys or cash for the fund may be left at the counter on the first floor of The Washington Post Building. Mailed donations should be directed to the cashier of The Washington Post. All cash contributions will be asknowledged in the columns of The Post as received.

Convicted Forger Loses Plea in U. S.

Writ Denied, Hull to Pass on Extradition to France.

By the Associated Press.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 7.—Charles Jean Drossner, soldier of fortune convicted of a 1,600,000-franc ($105,000) bond forgery in Paris, lost another fight against extradition today when Federal Judge F. A. Geiger denied his plea for a writ of habeas corpus.

Whether the former Stanford University student is to be extradited awaits action by Secretary of State Hull, who has until January 15 to decide the case.

Drossner said he was in New York in 1928, when the forgery was alleged to have been perpetrated, and has not been in Paris since 1918. He testified a passport photograph had been "doctored" to resemble the person supposedly involved in the forgery.

French attorneys said Drossner, now 45 years old, would be given a new trial if returned to France.

Here's a Woman, Now, Who's Going Places

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—A coast-to-coast airplane hop by Mrs. Ossie Drimmer and her 3-year-old son, Ali, was extended to Ambrose Light today to permit them to catch the liner Gripsholm as it steamed out of the harbor for Sweden.

Determined to spend the Christmas holidays with relatives in Sweden, Mrs. Drimmer flew from Los Angeles to board the liner, sailing at noon. The plane arrived too late for the regular New York transport at Cleveland, but she chartered a special plane for Newark.

The Gripsholm was held a half-hour, but finally got under way. Mrs. Drimmer hired an amphibian at Newark and caught the ship at Ambrose Light. She and her son were transferred to the Gripsholm in a yawl.

Bone May Ask Nye Committee To Probe Bids

To Present 'Collusive' Ship Estimates to Munitions Investigators.

By the Associated Press.

A suggestion that the Senate Munitions Committee might scrutinize bids for a new liner, recently opened in New York by the United States Lines, was made yesterday by Senator Bone (Democrat), Washington.

He contended the bidding apparently was in line with evidence previously developed by the committee on collusion among major shipbuilding companies.

The Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. of Newport News, Va., submitted what company officials said was the best of four bids. It offered to build and partly decorate a substantial duplicate of the liner Washington for $11,600,000.

The United States Lines has agreed to forfeit $1,000,000 to the Government if a contract for the new liner is not let by December 16. This agreement was entered into when the lines obtained Government permission to retire the Leviathan.

Pressure of Business.

Among the letters received by ship operators was one from the Federal Shipbuilding Co. of Kearney, N. J. It expressed regret that pressure of existing business prevented submission of a bid.

The New York Shipbuilding Corporation of Camden, N. J., approximated their bid at $11,188,000 for a ship without decoration or furnishings. This firm said the price would depend on what the Government required. The Federal Shipping Board and the Navy Department must approve the contract.

The Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation said it wuold build a liner of the Washington type at a price 15 per cent higher than that of the original.

"I'm going to remember this," Bone said. "I'm going to call it to the attention of Senator Nye, Republican. of North Dakota and Senator Clark, Democrat of Missouri, members of the munitions committee, and we may stick our 'proboscises' into that business."

Increasing Naval Costs

Bone said one reason he wants the Government to construct its own ships in its own yards is that this is the "only thing to do with those fellows and keep from getting rooked."

"There is a lot of damned hooey and funny work in this whole business."

The munitions committee has made an extensive investigation of increasing costs of naval construction in private yards.

Administration policies in connection with the retirement of the Leviathan were criticized some time ago by Ewing Y. Mitchell, ousted Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

The Virginia firm in its letter said it would build a substantial duplicate of the original Washington, meet all Federal and Navy Department requirements, many of which do not go into effect until July 1, 1936, and do a goodly portion of the decorating for $11,600,000.

The firm said it would require 28 months to get the vessel off the ways. It would be 714 feet long, 90 feet beam and of 23,000 gross tons. The vessel would make 20 knots.

The bid did not include furnishings. The original Washington and Manhattan of the United States Lines, completely decorated and furnished, cost $10,500,000 each.

Bids recently asked for a luxury liner went unanswered and, as a result, new specifications were sent out for a liner of the type of the sister flagships of the line, the Washington and Manhattan.

Monoxide Gas Kills 2 In Cab of Motor Truck

Elkton, Md., Dec. 7 (AP).—Two truck drivers from Indianapolis, Ind., died in the cab of their truck here early today from carbon monoxide gas which seeped into the cab from the motor of the vehicle.

They were identified from papers in their pockets as Roy Shelley, 33, and Audie G. Ezell, 37. The body of one was slumped in the driver's seat and that of the other was in the bunk at the rear of the cab.

New Peace Plan To Be Drawn Up By Laval, Hoare

Basis for New Attempt to End War Is Laid at Paris Conference.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 7.—Preliminaries were laid tonight for a Franco-British peace plan to halt the African war and ease a tense Europe.

Emerging smiling from a two-and-one-half-hour conference, France's Premier Pierre Laval and Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign minister of Great Britain, announced they would draft a basis for settlement.

French officials said the draft would be submitted to Premier Mussolini of Italy and the League of Nations sanctions committee of 18 as the limit of what France and Britain consider the League can accept. Thus the responsibility for any failure in negotiations would be shifted upon Premier Mussolini.

An oil embargo undoubtedly will be voted against Italy by a League committee December 12, these officials said, but its application probably will be held in abeyance until after the United States Congress meets in January.

If Congress fails to take a similar action, the League then might cancel the embargo as ineffective, it was added.

New Pleas Made.

Laval and Hoare put their heads together after Great Britain dispatched a new peace plea to Italy. They had been informed that Premier Mupssolini was defiant of sanctions in a speech to his Parliament today. The two will resume their deliberations tomorrow.

The French Ambasasdor to Rome, Count Charles de Chambrun, was reported to have made an appeal to Mussolini similar to that of Britain's.

Only a brief communique was issued after conference tonight. It said:

"The two ministers affirmed the existence of a complete accord between the governments for a policy of close collaboration.

"They exchanged views and will continue tomorrow with a view to drafting a basis which could be proposed for settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict."

Straus Sees Laval.

In French circles it was believed that Jesse I. Straus, the American Ambassador to Paris, has discussed the proposed oil embargo with Laval, although the American Embassy described Straus' visit as "merely one of those the Ambassador makes regularly to keep himself informed."

Mussolini's speech left a gloomy effect here, said one official, but "does not completely shut the door."

It was reported in circles close to the foreign office that Vittorio Cerruti, the Italian Ambassador, had advised Laval to disregard any harsh language in Il Duce's speech to the deputies. He was said to have told the premier that such language was intended for Mussolini's Fascist followers.

St. Louis Democrats To Tax City Employes

St. Louis, Dec. 7 (AP).—Mayor Bernard F. Dickmann today said an assessment would be made against the salaries of city and State employes in St. Louis for one month to raise $5,500 pledged to help liquidate a reported $400,000 deficit in the treasury of the Democratic national committee.

Mayor Dickmann said the assessment was determined by local Democratic leaders after the deficit was pro-rated among the States, and had been set at one-half of one per cent.

ing applications of the oil embargo, or otherwise Mussolini would have made a more forceful protest against it.

"In these past hours," Mussolini told the chamber, "a slight improvement in the atmosphere has become apparent, and perhaps a mitigation of some of the measures already conceived, but I have the duty to warn you against premature and excessive optimism.

"Contacts of two experts do not mean negotiations or even the possibility of negotiations. Finally, even when negotiation begins, it cannot be said that a happy and satisfactory conclusion has been reached."

"I wish to reaffirm in the most precise manner," he declared, "that the conclusion of this crisis can occur only when complete recognition of our rights and the security of our African interests are obtained. Meanwhile, our program continues in Italy and Africa."

Commenting on Hoare's speech in which the British minister expressed a desire for a strong Italy in Europe, Mussolini said:

"We have been working for this for 14 years * * * Italy cannot be as strong in Europe as Sir Samuel Hoare wishes unless the security of our East African colonies is safeguarded * * * the Italian people will listen to words but they want facts.

"Because of Sir Samuel's premises, we are in legitimate expectancy of successive consequences * * * Italy cannot be strong if it cannot develop backward lands and her capacity for expanding, populating and civilizing them, which Sir Samuel himself in his speech clearly recognized."

Regarding the oil embargo and other sanctions, Mussolini said it is possible that League sanctions will never be applied again, but are being used now against Italy because she is weak in raw materials.

"The fact which is announced for December 12, namely, the oil embargo," he said, "is such as to prejudice seriously the development of the situation."

The penal code of the League, he emphasized, has never been applied before "in cases infinitely graver and more circumstantial than ours," and added:

"It is being attempted against Italy today because she is poor in raw materials. Therefore, such a method of reasoning places a rich people, armed with their richness and their greater weapons, in safety from the punishment which the Geneva code provides."

Amid loud cheers, he declared:

"To those governments and nations which protested against the application of article 16 we send our present and future sympathy."

"It would be ungenerous on our part," he continued, "if we failed to acknowledge that great portion of the French people and almost the total of their war veterans have arrayed themselves against sanctions and their successive application. Nor can we ignore the manifestations against sanctions which have occurred in Belgium and more or less official quarters in other countries."

He said other nations had asked Italy to make known her intentions.

"We have done this right along and in great detail to the French government," he declared, "but instead of negotiations resulting, there came sanctions."

He recalled that in his speech of October 2 he protested against the mere talking of sanctions, which "should have served as a warning."

"Our counter-sanctions are all logical and absolutely moral as legitimate defense," he affirmed, adding that it is the moral aspect of sanctions which humiliates Italy.

The nations, he said, must take into account Italy's "spiritual factors—a spirit which will resist and will fight."

"I have an impression that the error committed against us is being realized," he commented.

Defendant Goes Free; Shot Brush Salesman

St. Louis, Dec. 7 (AP).—A Circuit Court jury held today that shooting a shot gun at a persistent brush salesman was not asault with intent to kill and freed Joseph Cockrell, 70, with the admonition to "go on home and be a good boy." Robert Bock, the salesman, said Cockrell wounded him October 7 when he insisted on seeing "the lady of the house" and Cockrell insisted he lived alone.

Italians Bomb Dessye Again; Selassie Safe shows anti-foreign feeling as soon as it is excited.

The latest dispatch from the United Press correspondent at Dessye, considerably delayed in transmission, said many of the injured were terribly mutilated and that the dead were lying in the ashes of their own homes.

One woman's house was blown to bits, killing her four children. She was in the hospital mortally wounded. Most of the dead were women, children and old people unable to flee.

Seven doctors at Dessye, either members of the Red Cross or the American Seventh Day Adventist Hospital, which was bombed, issued a formal protest today against the "atrocious and cruel demonstration."

They declared that three squadrons of four planes each bombed the town for an hour, showering it with incendiary and explosive shrapnel bombs and causing many dead and wounded. The declaration said:

"The first bombs dropped on Red Cross Ambulances on which the international emblem was hoisted. We detail:

"Five were maimed at the main building of the Tafari Makonnen Hospital (the Adventist hospital), completely destroying the instrument room and two wards * * * an annex 100 meters away was struck and a surgical tent from ambulance 5,200 meters distant, was set afire and destroyed."

Declaring that the Red Cross emblem was clearly displayed in considerable numbers around the hospital, the doctors said:

"We protest and stigmatize this inhuman act before the whole civilized world and call attention of all governments, the League of Nations and all religions to this fact that within the Red Cross enclosure, more than 40 bombs were dropped.

Petra Hoevig, Norwegian nurse at the Dessye Hospital, was brought here by plane. She suffered a double compound fracture of the leg when she jumped into a protection trench.

U. S. Awaits Word.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Hull said at his press conference yesterday that the State Department still was awaiting advices from its legation at Addis Ababa concerning the bombing by Italian planes of the American hospital at Dessye.

Asked whether this Government was contemplating any action in the matter, Hull said he desired to have the full facts before considering the possibility of taking any steps.

Thus far, he said, the Department has received no official information directly and its only advices on the bombing are those contained in newspaper accounts.

Boycott Hurts World's Trade, Schacht Holds

German Criticizes League as Fostering Desire for Anarchy.

By the Associated Press.

Munich, Germany, Dec. 7.—Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, minister of economics, criticized League of Nationse sanctions today as fostering the desire for autarchy, which, he said, was "completely inconsistent with sound economic development."

Addressing the League of Friends of the Technical University, Schacht declared:

"Modern war will be mostly an economic war. So-called sanctions, a problematic invention of the League, must have an effect on world commerce which cannot now be appreciated. They strengthen the wish for self-sufficiency.

"I believe the world crisis would end astonishingly soon if the creditor countries would drop once and for all their thumbscrew policies.

"If the creditor strikes off part of his demands, and keeps his business, the debtor remains able to purchase and soon becomes able to pay his obligations."

The minister listed the causes of the economic depression as being increased technical advances, international industrial competition and international failure to exchange finished goods for raw materials.

"World business, like society, can endure only when its finances are sound," Schacht said. "The country's currency can be sound only when balance payments are equalized."

He assailed the "unnatural debt twistings of the world creditor—the United States—for not permitting equalization of Germany's balance on which the building up of currencies is based."

Eskimo Gives Feast With Rogers Reward

Barrow, Alaska, Dec. 7 (AP).—Clare Oakpeha, the Eskimo who ran across the frozen tundra to give the world news of Will Rogers' death, spent the $87 he received from Eastern admirers for food—and it lasted just three days. He invested it all in "grub" and announced "open house to feed all comers."

Now his family is hungry again but, Eskimo-style, he'd do it just that way if he were given thousands of dollars, Dr. Henry Greist, Presbyterian medical missionary, said today.

"Eskimos are like generous children with a bag of candy," the doctor explained.

Schuschnigg to Go To Praha for Talk

Visit Seen as Friendly Gesture to Little Entente.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Dec. 7.—Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg announced today he would go to Praha December 16, a diplomatic development which informed sources said might have the effect of bringing Austria closer to the once hostile Little Entente.

The Austrian chancellor declared he was going to the Czech capital to lecture before an organization of industrialists, but sources close to the government added that he would also meet responsible leaders of the Czech republic.

The conferences at Praha were also interpreted as a slight retreat from the policy of close association with Hungary.

Hungary's inclination toward a pro-German course was said authoritatively to be distasteful to Austria.

Nanking Backs Own Free State In North China

with few exceptions during the past weeks, have been busily engaged in avoiding any pro-Japanese commitments.

The new determination of the Nanking government (which is supported whole-heartedly by the Kuomintang, only powerful party in China) to take definite action in north China to preserve its power is due in great measure to yesterday's Nanking elections in which the authority of Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek, generalissimo and China's strong man, was confirmed and augmented with new power.

Chiang's election to the chairmanship of the executive Yuan—a post corresponding roughly to the Presidency in the United States, and his retention of the chairmanship of the military commission, makes him stronger than ever. In addition, he was made vice chairman of the central executive council under Wang Ching-Wei and vice chairman of the central political council under Hu Han-ming.

Holds Powerful Posts.

Both these posts are equivalent to chairmanships, for Wang still is recovering from the attempt on his life on November 1 and Hu's acceptance remains uncertain as no confirmation has been received that he has left France, where he was in voluntary exile.

The central government thus makes Chiang stronger than ever, making him a dictator to deal swiftly and with certain authority with any menace, domestic or foreign, to China's sovereignty.

Meanwhile local Japanese military spokesmen and the Japanese government itself apparently were trying to keep up with the fast-moving Chinese developments. Lieut. Col. Tan Takahashi, military attache at the Japanese embassy here and spokesman on affairs in north China, doubted the reports of Gen. Ho's progress, but declined to make any comment on the Japanese reaction.

3 British Officers Hurt; 60 Taken to Jail.

By the Associated Press.

Cairo, Egypt, Dec. 7.—Police and 1,000 students of Cairo University fought a fierce battle with stones, bird shot and clubs today in Egypt's latest outburst of opposition to British domination.

Three British policemen were injured and 60 students were taken to jail. The fighting raged for half an hour at the Giza Bridge.

Dozens were beaten and knocked down. Police fired bird shot at the legs of the demonstrators, and shot over their heads in the air before gaining control.

The direct cause of the outbreak was the refusal of permission for the students to erect a monument on the campus in honor of classmates killed in a recent anti-British riot. The students had just returned to classes after an enforced holiday.

Police first raised the Giza Bridge to prevent the youths from entering the city, but later lowered it, and the battle followed.

Odessa, U. S. S. R., Dec. 7 (AP).—Five men were drowned today when a grain barge became detached from the small steamer "Harpoon" and sank in a storm in the Black Sea.

Air War Game Halted For Plane Inspection

Miami, Fla., Dec. 7 (AP).—A "safety first" order to ground all planes for mechanical checkup today interrupted, presumably over the week-end, the Army general headquarters air force's mimic warfare in South Florida.

Officers instructed ground crews to give bombing, attack and pursuit ships based respectively at Vero Beach, Fort Pierce and Miami, thorough inspections. A spokesman for the force's commanding officer, Brig. Gen. Frank M. Andrews, attributed to good equipment, vigilance of ground crews and "lots of luck" the fact 150 odd planes concentrated here from far distant fields and staged six days' maneuvers without accident.

League Offers U. S. a Budget That Balances

Economy Group Proposal Would Change Deficit Into Surplus.

Offering to the Administration a budget that, instead of the indicated deficit of more than $3,000,000,000, would, it says, provide an actual surplus of $264,617,000 in the next fiscal year, the National Economy League yesterday said the emergency has passed and called on Congress to "throw away the red ink bottle."

The Economy League would make its greatest slashes in relief and public works expenditures, cutting emergency expenditures from what it called a probable total of $4,968,567,589 to $1,000,000,000. It figures necessary relief expenditures, under a "liberal" estimate based on 3,804,000 cases, at $1,103,580, of which it would require State and local governments to provide $562,800,000, leaving $539,780,000 as the Federal Government's share. It commented that a "Federal relief subsidy of $500,000,000 in 1937 would be adequate to take care of all families actually in need," since its "liberal" estimate of total cost assumes practically no reduction in relief rolls.

To the $500,000,000 relief "subsidy," the league would allow an appropriation of another $500,000,000 to carry out contractual obligations already entered into on behalf of the housing, rural resettlement, TVA and other agencies.

The league's proposed budget puts estimated total revenues for the next fiscal year at $5,313,000,000, as compared with income of $4,470,349,140 for the current fiscal year as given in the President's revised budget. It would limit expenditures to $4,540,383,000, as compared with the $7,752,332,000 disbursements of this year in the President's revised figures. The league's figures would provide a surplus after a statutory debt retirement of $772,617,000.

It would cash in on Reconstruction Finance Corporation's assets to the extent of $500,000,000, while the present budget provides only $100,000,000 from that source.

Processing taxes and benefit payments to farmers would be discontinued, removing a $400,000,000 item.

National defense would be cut $50,000,000.

"The budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936, can be balanced," the league said. "It can be balanced without sacrificing necessary relief and without crippling any necessary Government service.

4½ Billion Cut.

"The plan we propose reduces expenditures which are likely to be made if present policies are carried forward by approximately $4,500,000,000. Our plan calls for no increase over the revenues which would be available if the prospective unbalanced budget is adopted. * * * "We must make an end to the policy of borrowing to pay for relief. The present plan of financing elaborate made-work projects with borrowed funds is thoroughly unsound. * * *

"Not only is our propesd budget in balance, but besides meeting statutory debt retirements, it provides an additional surplus of $264,617,000 which may be used for further debt retirement. If the President and Congress adopt some such budget as is here proposed, they will have taken an important step toward real recovery."

Crippled Hill Man Is Doomed, First Under U. S. Murder Law

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, Dec. 7.—The first man to receive the death penalty under the new Federal law, George W. Barrett, 50-year-old crippled Kentucky mountaineer, today was found guilty of first degree murder by a Federal court jury for the slaying of a Federal officer. The verdict carries a mandatory sentence of death by hanging.

He was convicted by a jury in 50 minutes for the killing of Nelson B. Klein, Government agent, at College Corner, Ind., last August 16. Klein was shot down as he and another Federal operative attempted to arrest Barrett on a charge of stealing automobiles.

Barrett's defense was that he thought the Government men were feudists from Clay County, Ky., seeking his life.

The defendant received the verdict stoically, sitting in the wheelchair to which he has been confined since the Klein killing, bullets from the guns of Klein and a fellow officer having splintered the bones in both legs.

Barrett was the second man to be tried under the Federal statute providing trial in Federal courts for killing of Government agents. John Chase is serving a life sentence in Alcatraz Prison, Calif., for the slaying of two Government agents in Illinois last year.

Judge Robert C. Baltzell said he would pronounce sentence December 14. Barrett's attorney, E. E. Rice, indicated he might file an appeal.

D. C. Heirs Charge Big Estate Wasted

Sue for an Accounting of Cooper's $1,400,000.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 7.—Trustees of the one-time $1,400,000 estate of the late Sherman T. Cooper, pioneer Chicago builder, were charged in an accounting suit filed in Federal Court today with causing a loss of $600,000 through alleged negligence and mismanagement.

The suit was brought in behalf of Coopers' five children and heirs, Helen M. Jordan, Los Angeles; and John V. Cooper, Doris Evelyn Cooper, Dorothy May Cooper and Sherman O. Cooper, all of Washington.

Defendants named were banks which served in succession as trustees, the State Bank of Chicago, the Foreman-State Trust and Savings Bank and the First National Bank of Chicago, together with their 17 directors.

The suit alleged that, in violation of a trust set up in Cooper's will, the defendants converted real estate into cash at sacrifice prices. An accounting and recovery of all assets which may be found to have been lost was demanded in the complaint.

Cooper died in 1923.

Scores Are Saved In Houston Flood

Stranded Families Removed as Bayou Breaks Banks.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Texas, Dec. 7.—Scores of men, women and children were rowed to safety from inundated homes late tonight as Buffalo Bayou threatened Houston with a repetition of the disastrous 1929 flood.

No drownings were reported.

Sheets of rain, which began falling last night, rapidly filled creeks and bayous and swirled into the low section west of Houston Heights and in the Airline Farms community, isolating hundreds in their homes.

At a late hour tonight the waters of Buflalo Bayou were threatening momentarily to invade the city central water plant. A force of 25 city employes was working desperately installing floodgates and throwing up a barrier of sandbags.

Redfern Hunters Start Flight Today

By the Associated Press.

Georgetown, British Guiana, Dec. 7.—Three men in the interior of the Guiana jungles will begin a three-day airplane search tomorrow for Paul Redfern, American aviator who has been missing for eight years.

Pilot Art Williams, Co-pilot Harry Wendy and their backer, Edward Hill, will fly over 700 square miles of wild territory in search of the man who vanished in 1927 on a flight from Brunswick, Ga., to Rio de Janeiro.

The three made preparations today at Wanatoba, near the intersection of the boundaries of Brazil and Dutch Guiana. They believe Redfern is living with some little-known Indian tribe in the hinterland.

Talmadge Asks Return to Policy Of Jefferson

'Real Democrats' to Call Atlanta Convention to Save Constitution.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Dec. 7.—A proposed Atlanta convention of the Southern committee to uphold the Constitution was described today by Gov. Eugene Talmadge, New Deal denouncer, as a move "to restore Jeffersonian democracy."

Talmadge announced plans for the meeting yesterday in New York, where he broadcast an address he called "Georgia's Answer to Roosevelt," criticizing the President and his Administration.

A January date for the Atlanta convention will be fixed within ten days, the Governor said, by him and John Henry Kirby, Houston, Tex., committee chairman.

Talmadge called members of the committee "the real Democrats," and said their meeting would be dedicated to "revitalizing" the Democratic Party with "the principles of Thomas Jefferson." He did not elaborate on plans or disclose whether a party bolt is under consideration.

A delegation of members met him in New York yesterday, he said, and proposed the organization convene in Atlanta.

Tokyo Police Seize Hundreds of Sect

Tokyo, (Sunday), Dec. 8 (AP).—Police arrested several hundred leaders of the Omotokyo religious sect today in a round-up supervised by the home ministry.

The cult was founded 40 years ago, stemming from the Shinto reilgion, and claimed more than 1,000,000 followers, mostly in Western Japan.

Rubio Cleared In Small-Loan Violation Case

Judge Upholds Broker Denial of Lending Own Cash to Borrowers.

Judge Gus A Schuldt yesterday dismissed charges of alleged violations of the "small loan" act of 1913 against Jacob Rubin, trading as the United Finance Co.

Charged with lending money at a greater interest than 6 per cent without having obtained a license, Rubin, through his attorneys, contended he was operating as a broker, purchasing and selling notes and not lending his own money. Judge Schuldt upheld this contention.

In rendering his decision, Judge Schuldt said he felt Rubin had not violated the law now on the statute books.

"This case demonstrates the necessity for having a new law enacted wherein and whereby the small-loan business, whether or not money is loaned or procured to be loaned, could be better regulated and wherein some standard could be fixed as to charges," Judge Schuldt stated.

Testimony in the case was to the effect that Raymond A. Wise secured $150 in Rubin's office and signed a note for $216, and Gladys A. Pantaze secured $75 and signed a note for $102.03.

HOLC Undecided On Foreclosures

By the Associated Press.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation yesterday said the number of foreclosures it may undertake in connection with its 1,000,000 mortgage loans "depends entirely" upon future economic conditions.

In a statement the HOLC contended that although 20 per cent of its loans are now 90 days or more overdue this cannot be taken as an accurate index of future foreclosures, because many of these delinquents "pay up when collection steps are taken."

Should present percentages continue, the HOLC might eventually own 200,000 homes, but officials maintained that with the continuation of improved conditions the percentage would be materially reduced.

"The actual number of repossessions to date is one to every 320 loans," it was said. "What it may be later depends entirely upon conditions."

Diplomat Given Blame in Crash, But Goes Free

Automobile of Japanese Aid at Embassy Reported on Wrong Side.

The car of an attache of the Japanese Embassy crashed head-on into another automobile on Connecticut avenue early yesterday, the fourth diplomatic traffic difficulty in less than a month.

The attache, Jiro Takase, 28, of the 3300 block Morrison street northwest suffered several broken teeth. Another attache, Tadatisa Matsudaira, 29, of the 1500 block Newton street northwest, suffered a cut above the right eye. The right hand of the driver of the other car, Russell J. Whitemore, of the George Mason Hotel, Alexandria, was sprained.

A formal police report said Takase was driving on the wrong side of the street. No charge was placed against anyone.

No action would be taken by the police, Maj. Ernest W. Brown said, unless the matter was brought specifically to their attention by a protest. In that case, a detailed report would be made to the State Department.

Immune From Arrest.

Maj. Brown said that if any person were registered at the State Department as a foreign nation's representative, he was immune from arrest.

Whitemore could not be reached for comment last night, and employes of the George Mason Hotel said they did not know him. Nor could Takase be reached. Matsudaira, a recent arrival, was in bed all day, it was said at his home.

The accident followed by less than 12 hours Secretary of State Hull's statement, occasioned by previous troubles of the Minister of Iran, in which the Secretary urged upon police officers "a strict observance of the law of nations regarding immunity."

At that time, the Secretary also added "that the privilege of diplomatic immunity does not presuppose the right to violate any of the laws or regulations * * that, on the contrary, the privilege of such immunity imposes the obligation of observing meticulously such laws and regulations."

Other Accidents

Previous diplomatic traffic incidents included:

November 10—Jose Gibernau, Spanish commercial agent, of the 2000 block Belmont road northwest, was arrested for speeding in Alexandria. He posted $8 collateral, failed to appear in police court, and succeeded in getting his money back last week after an appeal to Gov. George C. Peery, of Virginia.

November 27—Ghaffar Djalal, Minister of Iran, was arrested for speeding near Elkton, Md., and was brought to town court handcuffed. He protested to the State Department, and Gov. Harry W. Nice of Maryland, last week reported that the two town policemen involved, Constable Clayton Ellison and Jacob Biddle, had been tried on a charge of assault, fined and discharged.

Brazilian Aid Released.

December 1—Claudio G. Hasslocher, son of the Brazilian commercial attache, of the 3500 block Quesada street northwest, driving in College Park, Md., collided with a car driven by Miss Dorothy Eva Quinn, 25, of Takoma Park, Md. Both were charged with reckless driving by County Policeman Howard Slater, but, after being brought to Hyattsville, Hasslocher was released when he proved he was a diplomat. Miss Quinn posted nominal bond, and the charge against her was dropped next day.

The Japanese attaches and Whitemore were treated at Emergency Hospital after their collision, which took place in the 2800 block of Connecticut avenue northwest. A map showing details of their accident, drawn by Pvts. R. M. Kirby and S. C. Belt, of the Eighth precinct, and sent to the Traffic Director's Office, indicated that Takase was driving south on the avenue, on the wrong side of the street, while Whitemore was driving north.

Exhibits Gathered For Display Here

Exhibits gathered from the far corners of the earth are being brought to the Carnegie Institution for display beginning Friday during the annual meeting of the board of trustees. The institution's staff of specialists are bringing the exhibits together with reports on the progress of various scientific investigations.

As the annual meeting falls on the centenary of the birth of Andrew Carnegie, the institution's founder, there will be placed on exhibit for the first time the original document, signed by Carnegie, creating a trust fund for the benefit of the Carnegie Institution.

Other exhibits will have to do with magnetic phenomena, cell divisions in mammalian eggs, the transmission of quality of racing in throughbred horses, the cultural stages reached by the Maya of Middle America in pre-Columbian days, and evidence on the residence of men in America contemporaneously with animals now extinct.

Jury Holds Son In Auto Crash Fatal to Mother

Other Driver Also Accused of Negligence After Inquest in Case.

Joseph C. Swartz, 26, of the 900 block East Capitol street, was ordered held for Police Court action under the negligent homicide act yesterday after an inquest into the traffic death of his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Swartz, 46, of Laurel, Md.

The coroner's jury also ordered held Benjamin H. Nolt, 20, of the 3500 block Eighteenth street northeast Wednesday.

Mrs. Swartz was riding with her son. She was pronounced dead from a punctured jugular on arrival in Sibley Hospital.

In holding the two men, the jury declared Mrs. Swartz's death was due to the careless driving of both motorists.

In a second inquest the jury issued a verdict that Mrs. Emily E. Treadwell 83, who lived at the George Washington Inn, New Jersey avenue and C street southeast, was killed by a hit-and-run driver whose identity is still undetermined.

Mrs. Treadwell was struck while crossing in the first block of Second street northeast, November 29. She was taken to Casualty Hospital and later transferred to Garfield Hospital, where she died from a skull fracture Thursday.

In yesterday's accidents, Pvt. Paul G. Tanner, 40, of 720 Ingraham street northwest, attached to the Third Precinct, suffered a brain concussion and fractures of the left arm when his car was in collision with a bus operated by Ray T. Cole, jr., 23, of 1964 Calvert street northwest, at Thirteenth and U streets northwest. Tanner was released from Freedman's Hospital but, after re-examination by a police surgeon, was sent to Emergency Hospital.

Larry Riggs, jr., 7, of 405 Massachusetts avenue northwest, was taken to Sibley Hospital last night with a brain hemorrhage received when he was struck in front of his home by an automobile, the driver of which was unknown to police at a late hour last night.

Fruit-Judging Test Won by Penn State

Students There Best in Eastern Colleges.

Best fruit judgers among the students of Eastern colleges are those of Pennsylvania State College, according to the results of the twentieth annual Eastern States Fruit Judging League contest, announced at College Park yesterday. The Penn State team, twice previously a contest winner, took permanent possession of the silver loving cup that was the prize.

Second place went to the University of West Virginia, third to Ohio State University, and fourth to the University of Maryland.

Individual high scorer was Raymond Reider, of Pennsylvania. Mason McConnell, of Ohio, was second. David C. Nellis, of Maryland, was third. They received medals.

Shoppers Start Holiday Buying Business Brisk

Merchants Place Christmas Stocks on Sale Earlier Than Usual.

While most shops did a big business, the crowds were orderly and unhurried. The weather was just brisk enough to keep everyone moving outdoors.

Meanwhile, John Hasley, chairman of the department store division of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, emphasized complete holiday stocks were placed on sale earlier than usual this year by Washington merchants.

"The general public," he said, "has thus far given little attention to the rapidly approaching Christmas season.

"Walk into a Washington store now and you see a variety of objects designed particularly for Christmas gifts. They represent, finally, the skill of one particular merchant or a single merchandising organization in assembling for your selection the choicest gift offerings of almost the entire civilized world."

Merchants, through Edward D. Shaw, secretary of their association, urged shoppers to carry their smaller bundles whenever possible to avoid mistakes in delivery due to the holiday crush.

In an attempt to relieve traffic congestion in the downtown area, the Traffic Bureau announced yesterday it had assigned eight men to intersections along Seventh, F and G streets.

Forty additional men from the police school will be assigned to the job next week, it was said. It is expected the increased force will aid in reducing accidents and alleviating holiday traffic.

Periodicals Used In Schools Listed

Without comment, Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou yesterday made available, at the Franklin School Building, a mimeographed list of 205 magazines and periodicals used the public schools.

Such a list had been requested by a special committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations, which is investigating school reading matter for communistic tinges.

The list included, among magazines popularly called liberal, the American Mercury, the Nation, and the New Republic, as well as the Saturday Evening Post and a number of specialized educational periodicals.

Drys Complain Permits Given To Bootleggers

Offutt Answers Charge by Citing Advance Notice Requirement.

Protests that a number of former bootleggers and gamblers had been permitted to engage in selling liquor in the District were voiced in letters written to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board by the Rev. E. M. Ellison, of the United Dry Forces, and Wilbur H. LaRoe, jr., parole board chairman and chairman of the civic affairs committee of the Federation of Churches.

The letters with replies by George W. Offutt, beverage board chairman, were made public yesterday.

Another development as dry leaders continued their drive to secure a dry Capital was announced by Representative Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, that he intended to introduce a bill in the approaching session of Congress to permit sale of drinks until 2 a. m. Sundays. The present law requires a halt at midnight Saturdays. Dirksen has assumed leadership of wets in resisting dry efforts.

Among the names mentioned by Ellison and LaRoe was that of Edward Killeen, gambling leader who was recently shot and killed.

Offutt cited the provisions of the liquor law requiring advance public notice of applications for liquor licenses and added:

"I regret to say that so far as I know no one has availed himself of this opportunity to assist the board in this wise. Our board felt all along that a persistent violator of the law is not a man of good moral character within the meaning of the act, and had any such violations been brought to our attention and proved before the issuance of a license the license would not have been issued."

Killeen formerly held a beer license. He had retired from his beer business several months before he was killed. The license was first issued to him by the beer board which preceded the present board, Offutt pointed out. Lieut. George Little, of the police vice squad, testified before the board only that he "believed" Killeen was a gambler, Offutt said.

About two men who were known as bootleggers in the prohibition era, Offutt said neither had been issued license. The complaint received was that both controlled establishments listed as being owned by other persons. Offutt said the board had affidavits that the listed owners were the real owners.

About three other men named by the dry leaders the board chairman said that charges that these men had been bootleggers had never before been brought to the attention of the board. He added that an investigation would be made.

Two meetings today will end the present drive of dry forces in the District. The first will be at 3 p. m. at the National City Christian Church. Speakers will include Police Inspector L. I. H. Edwards. The other meeting will be at 7 p. m. at the Fifteenth Street Presbyterian Church.

Mentzer to Design Bal Boheme Sets

Raymond Mentzer, artist with a Georgetown studio, will design next month's Bal Boheme for the Arts Club, it was announced yesterday. This will be the thirteenth annual ball, and Mentzer will seek to interpret the theme, "Superstition," in modernistic settings and costumes.

The poster contest for the ball closes Thursday at midnight, the club added. It will be judged by Miss Leila Mechlin, Miss Eleanor Custis, Miss Helen Townsend, Louis Simon and Commander Lewis P. Clephane on Friday. The posters must be turned in at the club, 2017 I street northwest.

Samuel Solt Dies Here At the Age of 76 Years

Samuel Solt, 76-year-old retired Government employe and father of James H. Solt, grand master of the Washington Odd Fellows, died yesterday at his home, 47 Quincy place northeast. Born in Carbon County, Pa., he had been living here for the past 18 years.

Surviving him, besides his son, James, are another son, Edmund W. Solt, and four grandchildren, two great-grandchildren. Funeral services will be held Monday at 8 p. m. from the John R. Wright chapel, 1337 Tenth street northwest. Burial will be held in Weissport, Pa.

Morley-Libby Debate on Peace At Friends Forum Called Draw

Two gentlemen, and they were careful to keep referring to each other that way, laid down barrages of sarcasm at each other last night.

It turned out that they were both fighting for the same end—Peace.

One of them was Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War.

The other was Felix Morley, editor of The Washington Post, whose position came in for many jibes.

The 250 persons present for the first Friends' Forum of the season, at 2111 Florida avenue northwest, had a good time, and a reporter found the positions of the two speakers to be as follows:

Libby stood for mandatory embargoes preventing shipments from the United States to belligerents, so that we might not obstruct other nations' peace efforts or find ourselves dragged into war.

Morely stood for co-operation in sanctions, so that we might not impede execution of the considered policy of 52 nations today. He said "the achievement of the age is the development of machinery which is able to define an aggressor for the first time in history, defining him by his own unwillingness to submit further to arbitration."

Morley hoped sanctions would work, but was not sure. Libby thought sanctions would lead to further sanctions, to blockades, and thus certainly to war.

Both grinned and shook hands afterwards.

D. C. Boundary Report Faces Congress Fight

A Congressional fight over the report of the District-Virginia Boundary Commission was foreshadowed yesterday after official publication of the recommendations revealed December 3 by The Washington Post.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the District government are expected to join hands with the Department of Justice in opposing ratification of the report by Congress. The Virginia legislature, which must also ratify the report before it becomes effective, it is believed, will adopt it eagerly.

The commission, which recommends that the boundary, disputed for 100 years, be fixed at "the low-water mark on the Virginia shore running from headland to headland," struck a staggering blow at plans of United States parks officials to extend the National Capital to the southwestern shores of the Potomac River.

Million Loss Seen.

Should the decision be accepted by Congress, it would remove from Federal jurisdiction and development land along the river and some under water, all of which is valued at approximately $1,000,000 by governmental experts.

About 60 acres of the Roaches Run bird sanctuary now being developed would be returned to Virginia, and more than 300 acres of filled-in land being developed in conjunction with the Mount Vernon Boulevard would be returned to private interests. The Federal government has already spent $30,000 on the bird refuge.

While Justice Department attorneys are busy preparing reports for Congress to counteract the commission's recommendations, the District Commissioners will this week read the report before mapping their course of action.

"I wouldn't want to say what the Commissioners will do until we have a chance to study the report," Commissioner George E. Allen said, "but I certainly will see to it that the interests of the District are made known to Congress."

Procedure Changed.

The report will go before the Senate and House Judiciary Committees instead of the two District committees, as the bill creating the commission was referred to the former following its introduction by Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), of Alexandria.

While Senator William H. King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, is ranking majority member of the Judiciary Committee, Representative Andrew J. Montague, of Virginia, holds a corresponding position in the House group.

Members of the two District committes who are sympathetic with the lack of local representation in Congress are prepared to take the floor, if necessary, to defeat the report.

Besides giving to Virginia practically all of the valuable land in the disputed territory on the ground that Virginia early took possession of it, and granted land patents, the commission would definitely assign to the State the Washington Airport, most of which was filled in by District refuse.

As Virginia and Arlington County are opposed to surrendering this valuable tract to the District or Federal Government for an airport, because it would be removed from taxation, the boundary decision, if sustained, probably will spell the eventual doom of the Washington Airport. Instead of becoming either a municipal airport or a United States park, it will be converted into another industrial district, Washingtonians believe.

Watchman Quizzed In Stone Firm Fire

Claude Brown, 45-year-old colored watchman at the R. B. Phelps Stone Co., was released yesterday after being questioned in connection with a fire that destroyed the company's office Friday night.

Brown was arrested by Twelfth Precinct police and was held for investigation when he was found wandering around the lot the stone company occupies at Ninth and Douglass streets northeast. The Negro lives in a shack on the lot.

The cause of the fire had not been definitely determined yesterday. Officials of the fire marshal's office said yesterday the blaze was probably due to an overheated stove in the room where Brown was sleeping.

Robber Empties Flower Shop Till

Armed Bandits Tie Up and Rob Florist of $57

Well-Dressed Pair Attack Sydney L. Resnick in His Shop.

Sydney L. Resnick, 37, of 469 F street southwest, was attacked by two well-dressed white bandits who entered his shop, the Oehmler Floral Co., 734 Eleventh street northwest, at 7 p. m. last night. They hog-tied him in the back room and escaped with $57, the contents of his cash register.

Resnick told police the men had come in the shop while he was waiting on a woman. When the woman left, one of them whipped out a gun, dug it into his ribs and forced him into the back room where he tied his wrists to his feet with heavy cord. The other bandit emptied the till.

After fifteen uncomfortable, minutes the florist heard Thomas Warfield, chef at the restaurant next door, moving in the basement. He kicked the floor with his heels to attract attention and Warfield finally sent in the restaurant proprietor, Morris Gendleman, who cut Resnick loose.

Resnick said he had been held up before, at a store in the 1200 block of G street northwest.

"After that holdup," he told detectives, "you asked me to come to headquarters to identify the white men who had robbed me. And each of the 47 times I went, there were only colored men in the line-up."

Man Robbed Third Time.

Two gunmen, their faces covered with handkerchiefs, last night held up Benjamin Krasnick, grocery store proprietor, in the rear of his home, 3318 Warder street northwest. They took $42 and a ring valued at $25. It was the third time within a year that Krasnick has been held up.

Krasnick said he left his store at 5035 Connecticut avenue and drove to his home in a truck used for deliveries. Just as he was getting out of the truck, a man approached, pulled a pistol from a pocket and said "stay still."

Then, the grocer said, another man appeared out of the shadows of nearby garages. The pair took his money and rings, disdaining some checks in his pocketbook. They then walked away after warning him they would "blow his brains out" if he made an outcry.

Krasnick was first robbed almost a year ago when gunmen took $650 from him. Again in May he was victimized, giving up $150. He said he believed one of the men who robbed him last night was white and the other colored. He would not be able to identify them, he said, because the handkerchiefs covered their features.

Jail Term Given Art 'Expert' Who Tried Swindles Here

George J. Shepherd, who posed as an art "connoisseur" and looked the part, yesterday was sentenced to the District Jail for from one to two years after being convicted of using the mails in an attempt to defraud Richard F. Cleveland, son of Grover Cleveland, twenty-second President of the United States.

He was accused of trying to sell Cleveland a "fake" portrait of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. He told Cleveland, according to the prosecution, that the portrait was done by the famous Rembrandt Peale.

Shepherd, a tall, distinguished-looking individual with an impressive "broad A" accent, shook his head on the witness stand and said: "It is all a mistake."

But the records in the office of the District Attorney indicated that the Cleveland incident was but one of many which had placed Shepherd under suspicion.

These records showed that he had attempted to sell his "works of art" to many notables, including Andrew Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury and Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

A year ago, Shepherd graciously presented to Secretary of the Navy Swanson a portrait of America's great naval hero, John Paul Jones. The portrait, which was placed at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, was described by Shepherd as the work of Benjamin West, a Pennsylvanian who had become one of England's foremost painters.

After Shepherd's arrest, Navy officers got suspicious, and, after an investigation, charged that the portrait was spurious. The paths of Jones and West, they said, never crossed.

Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, who passed sentence on Shepherd in the District Supreme Court yesterday, said he was giving him the one-to-two year sentence because of his weak heart.

Col. Kenyon Proposes Death To Communists

Former Army Officer Gives 'Cure' Before Oldest Inhabitants.

Death for Communists was advocated last night by Col. J. Miller Kenyon, lawyer and former Army officer, before the Oldest Inhabitants Association celebrating its seventieth birthday at a banquet in the Raleigh Hotel.

Kenyon said his experience in the Army convinced him of the "terrible threat" to the American Government in Communism.

"If I had my way," he said, "just so soon as there were no doubt of Communistic, red or anarchistic designs by an individual he she or they would be taken to Ellis Island, loaded on a scow or scows, towed to the 12 mile zone and the scows would be blown up with all on board.

"Then any others of similar leanings left in America would run to other countries like scared rabbits.

"Persons, native or foreign, not in sympathy with our form of government, should be dispensed with."

Kenyon urged election by popular vote of a Representative in the House for the people of the District.

A speech opposing tax increases here written by Theodore W. Noyes, association president, was read by John Clagett Proctor, vice president. Mr. Noyes was absent because of illness.

"It must send a shock of fear down the District taxpayers' spine," Noyes wrote, "when he realizes that if present methods of national taxation are followed he and his descendants must pay more absolutely than the people of 23 States and more per capita than the people of 38 States in meeting the obligation incurred by the many billions of vast expenditures in New Deal experimentation."

Local taxpayers, Noyes protested, "already heavily tax-burdened in view of their peculiar disabilities, are threatened with great and hurtful increases in taxation, both municipal and national, at a time when depression seriously diminishes their taxable resources."

Clifford K. Berryman, cartoonist, gave an illustrated talk on "Early Reminiscences of Washington," Frank K. Sanderson, accompanied by Mrs. Sanderson, sang several old numbers and Mr. Proctor recited an original poem.

Archbishop of York On Air Here Today

The Most Rev. William Temple, Archbishop of York and Primate of England, will broadcast his first message to the American people at 10 a. m. today over Station WJSV.

The English prelate will speak from Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral. The public will not be invited to the chapel for this.

After the radio address the archbishop will preach at the 11 a. m. celebration of the holy communion in the great choir of the cathedral. The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, and the Right Rev. James De Wolf Perry, presiding bishop of the Protestant Epscopal Church in the United States, will take part in the service.

The archbishop, who came to Washington Friday from New York, yesterday called at the British Embassy to pay his respects to Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador.

Mercy Balked

Law Prevents Death of Suffering Horse.

A crippled mare, her hind quarters apparently paralyzed, last night lay helpless and suffering in a stable in the 400 block of M street northwest because the District law would not permit her painless destruction.

Unable to locate the owner of the animal, workers of the humane society were unable to destroy her because the District law allows them to relieve the suffering of a horse without the owner's permission only when it has a "visible mortal injury."

The mare was found helpless and evidently abandoned in the street. She was half dragged and half lifted to the stable.

Citizens' Group Urges Schools Eliminate Reds

Resolution of Federation Assails Communist Propaganda.

Complete elimination of all Communistic propaganda from the District public schools was urged in a resolution adopted without a dissenting voice by the Federation of Citizens Associations meeting in the District Building last night.

Efforts of its executive committee to bring this about were strongly indorsed and commended. The resolution was presented by George E. Sullivan, of the Citizens Association of Takoma, D. C., and was adopted without a fight.

One dissenting voice was raised mildly, that of Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, of the Kalorama Citizens Association, who read resolutions adopted by that association and by the executive board of the District League of Women Voters. The resolutions urged "cessation of efforts by some persons and organizations to spread, not only in the District but also elsewhere in the United States, charges or implications that pro-Communist teaching is carried on or sanctioned by any authority in the District of Columbia Schools, since such charges and implications are unproved by any evidence on particular cases and seem to be based on a distortion of the stand actually taken by the Board of Education and its employes.

When the Sullivan resolution had been adopted without a dissenting voice, Henry I. Quinn, member of the Board of Education, and Mrs. Wiley asked to be recorded as not voting. The resolution follows:

"Be it resolved, by the federation, that it strongly indorses and commends the steps recently inaugurated, and which are being continued, by its executive committee looking to the complete elimination from the public schools of all communistic propaganda.

"Be it further resolved, that this federation urges and advocates the immediate substitution, in place of such communistic propaganda, of a thorough progress of enlightenment of all the pupils of the public schools as to the underlying principles of this great republic established by our forefathers at great sacrifice, also as to how justice is established, happiness and welfare of the people promoted, and the blessings of liberty secured thereby, and further as to how communism seeks to mislead and beguile the immature and unenlightened to give up our priceless heritage and to accept instead bondage under the bolsheviks.

"Be it also resolved, that copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the Board of Education, and to the Senate and House District Committees of Congress."

Opposing the resolution and defending Carl L. Becker's Modern History, used as a textbook in the public schools, Mrs. Wiley had protested against passing judgment on isolated excerpts from the book.

"Why," she said, "I am informed that other passages in this book counteract those which have been quoted in the press. This whole controversy is detrimental to our city."

"We all know that they are teaching socialism in our great universities," averred John Saul. C. M. Maize, of Kenilworth, said "we ought not to allow in the schools anything that has the word communism in it." Harry N. Stull, of Stanton Park, warned that communistic organizations, such as the Young Pioneers were seeking to convert pupils through pamphlets.

New Taxes Opposed.

No new taxes should be proposed to Congress at this time the Federation said in approving a report submitted by L. A. Carruthers, chairman of the fiscal relations committee. The report developed the most spirited debate of the meeting.

"There's going to be an increase in taxes next year as sure as death and present taxes," protested James G. Yaden, former president. "The question is whether the Federation is going to participate in the conferences at which these taxes will be decided on. Legislation already enacted is going to require additional revenue. The Social security legislation alone will call for a considerable amount. Will we be prepared?"

Sullivan said he "absolutely disagreed" and protested the Federation couldn't pass sound judgment because it was not apprised of proposed 1937 expenditures. Stull said no one could tell how much revenue would be needed. Yaden said $4,000,000. "A mere guess," rejoined Stull. The federation ought to have something to say, Yaden said. Kenneth P. Armstrong, Burroughs association, said Congress was violating the law governing Federal appropriation.

Before a new tax program can be worked out, the Carruthers report said, "revenue needs must first be determined.

"We are opposed to the imposing of any tax that will result in a pronounced surplus, believing that it will tend to extravagance and result in a further decrease in the Federal appropriation."

The Federation voted to participate in the ceremonies incident to opening of Calvert street bridge and adopted a resolution demanding the street car and bus companies be required to bear their share of the cost of snow removal

Dr. Gallup Tells How Institute Gauges Opinion

'Sampling Method' Used to Avoid Weaknesses of Straw Votes.

Dr. George Gallup, managing director of the American Institute of Public Opinion, last night explained to a radio audience the methods, the motives and the degree of accuracy behind "America Speaks," a weekly survey of public opinion prepared by his research organization and published in 60 newspapers, including The Washington Post.

Talking over WRC, Dr. Gallup recalled statements of James Bryce, great English commentator on the American commonwealth, and of Woodrow Wilson, America's wartime President, concerning the need of determining public sentiment on important questions and doing it quickly.

"America Speaks," Dr. Gallup said., was designed to meet that need.

"Sampling Method."

Public opinion is gauged, he explained, by the "sampling method"—that is, by polling a cross-section of Americans; farmers and city dwellers, rich persons and poor persons, Republicans and Democrats.

His research organization, Mr. Gallup explained, is not subsidized but stands squarely on its own feet financially. "America Speaks," he said, is sold just like any other newspaper feature.

Dr. Gallup was introduced to the radio audience by Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Washington Post, and was asked questions concerning "America Speaks" by John Heiney, of The Post staff.

Mr. Meyer said that, in the course of many years in the public service, he had learned that there was a great difference between public opinion as it was represented to be and as it really was. Politicians, he said, often appeared to be, and by later events were proved to be quite wrong in their appraisal of the facts of public opinion.

Gap Is Closed Up.

"When the Gallup Research organization began to make surveys of public opinion, and later to present them for publication through newspapers," Mr. Meyer said, "it was at once apparent to me that there was a way by which the gap between public opinion, as represented by editors and politicians and as it was in fact, was now being closed up."

Mr. Heiney, acting as interlocutor, asked Dr. Gallup to explain his "sampling method" of gauging public opinion.

"The sampling method, Dr. Gallup replied, "is exactly the same as the one used by Government inspectors in testing wheat, or cotton, or by public health men in testing the water supply. They take a sample here, another there, and by choosing the samples properly are able to judge the quality of the whole amount from what the sample shows."

The danger involved in most straw votes, Dr. Gallup said, is that the ballots will be sent to persons in the middle and upper classes, whose names are gleaned from directories and telephone books.

To make sure that "America Speaks" reaches all classes, Dr. Gallup said, 100 interviewers are employed to talk to laborers and persons on relief in various parts of the country.

Dr. Gallup said that he and his associates experimented with "America Speaks" for two years before offering it to newspapers. In the congressional elections of last year, he said, his organization judged the results in advance to within six-tenths of 1 per cent of accuracy.

Thaw Speeds Rescue Plane For Ellsworth

Pilot Completes First Leg of Long Flight to Aid Polar Explorer.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Dec. 7.—Completing the first leg of 9,500-mile flight South to deliver a plane to be used in search for Lincoln Ellsworth, missing Antarctic explorer, Russell W. Thaw and a mechanic who took off from Caldwell, N. J., this morning landed here late today.

Thaw left the New Jersey airport at 10:10 a. m. and set the Northrop monoplane down here at 4:30 p. m., central standard time. He was accompanied by William Henry Klenke, jr., of New York.

The flier and his mechanic said they planned to spend the night at the hangar at Candler Field here and take off "just as soon as possible but depending on the weather" for Brownsville, Texas, the next scheduled stop.

Thaw plans to deliver the plane to the Wyatt Earp, Ellsworth's supply ship, and then return. Ellsworth and his pilot have not been heard from since an attempted flight over the South Pole. Thaw hopes to make the trip to the Southernmost part of South America in six days and then contact the Wyatt Earp.

Wilkins Awaits Plane.

Magallanes, Chille, Dec. 7 (AP).—Sir Hubert Wilkins, the explorer, arrived today from Deception Island to await the arrival of a plane from New York to be used in the searcch for Lincoln Ellsworth, missing Antarctic explorer, and his pilot, Herbert Hollick-Kenyon.

Sir Hubert said he had requested the plane be sent because of continued silence from the Ellsworth plane.

He expressed confidence that the missing men were safe, and said the rescue plane would be used to leave foodstuffs in places "where explorers are likely to arrive while a search is being made."

Berry Declares Industrial Plan Must Be Found

Another Session Is to Be Called if Tomorrow's Fails, He Says.

Intimation that another conference on industry will be called if the one opening here tomorrow fails to adopt a satisfactory program was given last night by George L. Berry, the President's industrial co-ordinator and sponsor of tomorrow's much rebuffed gathering.

"If this conference does not meet squarely the problems of unemployment, taxation and public debt, as involving industrial policy, a later one will," he declared in a statement.

Looking over rejections of his invitation from some of the most powerful business and industrial organizations in the country, but still professing optimism toward the ultimate outcome of his undertaking, Berry said:

"While I realize it will be a tremendous task to compose their differences, I have not the slightest doubt that the industrial council will be able to agree on some of the fundamentals of a national industrial policy, and to find statesmen within its ranks with a broad vision of the general needs of business and the requirements of human need.

"The Right Will Prevail."

"I have been composing human differences for 30 years and have learned to face success or failure with a smile. I know that in this cause as in others where human problems are concerned (and I hold that industry's only purpose is to serve human needs), the right will ultimately prevail."

Mention of the "next" depression found its way into the co-ordinator's statement, along with his insistence that governmental leadership must be recognized by industry.

"I have been deeply gratified," he said, "by the confidence expressed by many who have said they could offer no particular solutions to the problems, but were looking to me to evolve from this conference a program and leadership to carry the Nation toward a stabilized and lasting prosperity.

"That is the keynote of these meetings. I hold that such a program must be found and must recognize the rights of all the elements in industry. Any other plan of action, failing to include human rights, and ignoring the Government's natural leadership in the Nation's affairs, is but a shadowy substance and must certainly fail. We must find industry leadership which with the Government's co-operation will lead us away from the past depression, instead of toward the next one."

Assemble Tomorrow.

The full conference will assemble tomorrow for Berry's opening remarks. No other speches will be made at that time. Berry will emphasize that he has no program and no formula, and that the results of the conference are up to the conferees themselves.

Then industry and labor will meet separately in the related industry groups, after which the Council of Industrial Progress is expected to be formed by representatives of the group meetings.

While Berry was issuing his statement yesterday the National Association of Manufacturers was announcing in New York that 82 per cent of the firms participating in a nationwide poll had voted against Federal legislation similar to the NIRA.

More than 10,000 replies have been received, the Association stated. The companies whose replies have been analyzed were said to employ nearly 3,900.000 wage earners. The figure was said to represent more than one-half of all the manufacturing employes in the United States.

Green Rejects Bid to Switch To Lewis' Side

He Spurns Offer of Helm in Rival Ranks if He Quits A. F. L. Job.

By the Associated Press.

A request by John L. Lewis that William Green step out of the presidency of the American Federation of Labor to head the industrial union movement, angrily declined, yesterday added to the tumult within the ranks of labor.

The scrappy chief of the United Mine Workers told the federation president he had heard Green's private sympathies lay with the cause of those who felt mass production workers should be organized by industry rather than by craft.

If so, Lewis asked, "Why not return to your father's house" and head the committee working for industrial unionism at the same pay the federation president now receives?

To which Green replied:

"To respond to the suggestion of President Lewis would mean that I would lend my assistance to development of division within the American Federation of Labor. That I cannot do.

"I am president of the American Federation of Labor, re-elected at the Atlantic City convention in October. I'm not president of any group within the federation and I'm endeavoring to prevent the setting up of organizations within the federation."

Editorial Battle.

This exchange followed a series of editorials in labor publications on the issue that grew so bitter at the federation's last convention that Lewis and William Hutcheson, hefty president of the carpenters' union, came to blows.

Labor, a publication controlled by craft unionists, accused Lewis of ingratitude for the help they had given him in building up his union through NRA and the Guffey act. Lewis' tactics, the paper said editorially, "delight the National Association of Manufacturers and other enemies of labor."

Green, writing in the American Federationist, said that "when the spirit of self-seeking or commercialism creeps in, then is the (labor) movement in danger."

"Instead of service for the whole group, the power of the movement is subordinated to the advancement of an individual or a group," he added.

The bricklayers' monthly magazine urged the rank and file of craft unionists to prepare to fight any incursions of industrial unions.

"The resignation of John L. Lewis from the executive council * * * does not mean that there will be a 'split' in the ranks of organized labor," said the Hosiery Worker, editorially.

Convention Decision.

Green called the issue "settled" after the Atlantic City convention, where the craft unionists, by a vote of about 18,000 to 10,000, defeated Lewis' proposal that mass production industries such as automobiles and steel be organized strictly along industrial lines. The craft unionists say that a machinist, for instance, should belong to the machinists' union, no matter where he works.

Within a few weeks after the convention's close, however, Lewis called to his headquarters his chief allies in the industrial union movement and organized a committee to promote the cause, quitting the Federation's executive council.

Lewis nominated Green for reelection at the last A. F. of L. convention. Green was secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers before he headed the Federation.

In his letter to Green yesterday, Lewis recalled Green's recent statement that he personally indorsed industrial union organization, but felt himself officially bound to support the craft union policy his own organization advocated.

Suggesting that such a position might bring attacks, Lewis urged:

"If you care to dissociate yourself from your present position, the committee for industrial organization will be happy to make you its chairman in my stead. The honorarium will be equal to that you now receive. The position would be as permanent as the one you occupy."

Lindeman to Speak.

Dr. Eduoard C. Lindeman, authority on community organization of the New York School of Social Work, will address an open meeting at 8 p. m. Wednesday in the auditorium of the American Red Cross Building. His subject will be "Mental Hygiene Aspects of Personal and Community Problems."

Maryland Rally Wins Over Terrors, 22 to 7

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A Staff Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 7.—If they paid off on sheer grit and determination Maryland and its arch-rival, Western Maryland, would have battled to a scoreless tie here this afternoon in one of the bitterest football feuds this rambling bowl has harbored all season.

But Maryland had the will to win, it had the speed, the power, and on three occasions it had the breaks, and that was enough to give the Terrapins a 22-7 victory before a throng of 10,000 enthusiastic fans. With the victory went the State championship, symbolized by the Mayor Howard W. Jackson Trophy, which was presented the victors at midfield immediately after the final whistle.

The Terrors passed their way into certain defeat after "Sunshine" Campbell's cannon-like peg had brought them from behind a 6-0 disadvantage into a 7-6 lead early in the second period. Until the Old Liners broke out in a rash of pass interceptions and recovered fumbles in the second half, it seemed that this narrow margin would withstand the battering of the Terps backs.

Fumbles Spell Defeat.

All of Maryland's three touchdowns can be traced directly to its opponent's miscues. A blocked punt paved the way for the first and a fumble recovered by Maryland arranged the trappings for the second. The third was made on a 48-yard run by Bill Guckeyson, who gathered in one of Campbell's prolific passes at midfield and breezed down the sidelines for the score.

Actually, the only score earned by the eventual winners was Johnny Gormley's 17-yard field goal from placement midway in the third period, and subsequently it turned out to be the turning point of the proceedings.

Maryland took the opening kick-off on its own 35-yard line, but failed to budge the stout Terror defense and Guckeyson lofted a beautiful punt outside on Western Maryland's 25-yard line. Maryland also held and Campbell dropped back for a punt, but too slow to evade the bulk of Lou Ennis, who blocked it and recovered the ball on the 7-yard line. On the first play Guckeyson passed to Headley for the touchdown.

Exchange Punts.

They exchanged punts and Maryland, starting from its opponents' 47-yard, marched down to the 5-yard line. Guckeyson, Headley and Ellinger led the parade until they were within spitting distance of another score, where the Terrors rallied and took the ball on downs.

Western Maryland launched a counter attack with Campbell alternately running the ball and throwing it to Benjamin that swept the Old Line back to its 30-yard line, where Maryland braced and held for downs. There was another exchange of kicks before the Westminster eleven swung into its touchdown march.

Taking the ball on his own 25-yard line, Lathrop swung wide at end for eight yards, and the referee gave his mates 15 more when Maryland was detected in the act of holding. They hit the line enough to plant the leather on Maryland's 45 and then came the bombshell.

Campbell faded back to his own 40-yard mark and got off a 50-yard pass that hit a bulls-eye on Stan Benjamin's chest and the lanky end ambled the remaining 10 yards for the score. Brennan place-kicked the extra point, lifting the Terrors' into a 7-6 lead which they held at the intermission.

A weak pass from Reith at center cost Western Maryland 20 yards following an exchange of kicks near the end of the third period, and when Lathrop booted a wobbly punt outside on his own 40, the Terps launched their winning drive. A pass, Ellinger to Ennis, gained 15 yards and Ellinger and Guckeyson personally carried it to the 15 as the period ended.

The Terrors hurled back two running plays and batted down an attempted pass before Gormley fell back and with Ellinger holding, kicked the field goal that sent his team ahead, 9-6.

Western Maryland's running game was wholly impotent in the face of the cast-iron defense thrown up by its foe, and its only recourse was in Campbell's whip-like left arm. As events proved, these same passes failed to deliver the Terrors from their plight, but only sealed their doom.

Maryland's second touchdown re-

Big Ten Lifts Ban On Pro Grid Pilots

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 7.—Professional football players, barred from coaching the sport in the Western Conference for more than ten years, were restored to good standing today by the faculty athletic committee.

The action will permit Red Grange, Illinois' "galloping ghost," or any other of the many Big Ten stars who turned to the pro game, to accept coaching positions in the conference. Such men were barred early in the last decade, the rule stating that only those professional players who were out of the commercialized brand of the game before 1923, should be eligible for coaching jobs.

Several coaches now on the job, among them Dr. Clarence W. Spears, of Wisconsin, and Burt Ingwersen, former Iowa head coach, and now line coach at Northwestern, played professional football, but had severed their connections before the deadline laid down by the rule.

Halfback Haines Goat, Hero As Washington U. Wins, 6 to 2

By the Associated Press.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Dec. 7.—Byron Haines added another weird chapter to the 1935 football season today when he accounted for all the scoring as Washington defeated California, 6 to 2, before 35,000.

Playing for the first time since he was selected as an All-Coast halfback, Haines started by picking up the opening kick-off on his 1-yard line and carrying it behind his goal line where he was tackled for a safety and two points for U. S. C.

Haines came back in the second period to justify his selection on the honor team by racing 25 yards for the only touchdown of the contest.

Southern California threatened three times in the final period but the Huskies stopped them.

On the third Trojan thrust, Haines intercepted a pass and ran it out 24 yards.

Ably aided by Jim Cain and Ed Nowgroski, Haines threatened on two other occasions but each time the defense of Coach Howard Jones' team proved too much.

An 80-yard drive led to the lone

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 7.—Devitt Prep's role in the American Legion's "Little Tobacco Bowl" football drama here today was chiefly that of playing the victim for Fork Union Military Academy's steam roller, which ground out a 26-to-7 victory with convincing dispatch.

A meager crowd of 2,500 thinly populated the little tobacco bowl as the Richmond City Stadium was dubbed for the day.

The onlookers saw the Washington team, playing in the absence of its coach, Jim McNamara, hold the co-holders of the Virginia prep school championship on even terms throughout the first half which ended with the count at 7-7, only to succumb to an avalanche of three touchdowns in the last two periods, two of which came after pass interceptions donated scoring opportunities to the Cadets.

Dubopsky in Charge.

The Devitt team was directed by Mush Dubofsky, former Georgetown grid great, hastily called to assume command by McNamara when the latter was called to New York to take part in the A. A. U.'s balloting on the Olympic question.

Despite the trouncing Devitt absorbed, the spectators left the scene of the carnage convinced the Washington team had an individual performer in Adam Zinkievich, the superior of any man on the field.

The Worcester, Mass., boy carried the ball nine out of ten times for his team, did all the passing and some matchless punting. Only Phil Demuro, Fork Union's All-State quarterback, approached Zinkievich's one-man performance. A 45-yard run for a touchdown, featuring the art of cutting back and reversing his field, was the foremost contri-

Vandy Declines, C. U. Is Due to Play Auburn

CATHOLIC University vs. Alabama Poly in the Orange Bowl. That is the new picture of the New Year's Day football game at Miami, Fla., as altered yesterday when Vanderbilt University declined the invitation to play as the opponent of Catholic U.

Irked by Vanderbilt's delay in making a decision, the Orange Bowl committee extended only until yesterday the invitation proffered the Commodores and was informed that Vanderbilt had declined.

A telegram dispatched by Vanderbilt authorities to W. Keith Phillips, chairman of the Orange Bowl committee, stated: "Vanderbilt University appreciates the invitation to play in the Orange Bowl but on account of final examinations which last until the end of the present session, it will be unable to accept any invitation for a post-season game."

Alternate Choice.

Alabama Poly, popularly known as Auburn, is the alternate choice as the South's representative in the Orange Bowl game and has indicated that it would accept. Approval of the Southeastern Conference, of which Auburn, like Vanderbilt, is a member, is expected to be a mere formality.

In Auburn, Catholic U. will encounter even a stronger foe than it would have met in Vanderbilt, which has been beaten thrice this season. Auburn has lost only two games, one a 13-6 upset defeat by Tennessee and the other a 6-0 loss to L. S. U. which won the Southeastern Conference championship by beating Tulane, 41-0.

Auburn is coached by Jack Meagher, former Notre Dame star, and thus the Orange Bowl clash will be a battle of two teams using the Notre Dame system, which is also practiced by Coach Dutch Bergman at Catholic U.

Auburn's 1935 record:

Auburn 25, Birmingham 7; Auburn 10, Tulane 0; Auburn 6, Tennessee, 13; Auburn 23, Kentucky 0; Auburn 7, Duke 10; Auburn 0, L. S. U. 6; Auburn 33, Georgia Tech 7; Auburn 51, Oglethorpe 0; Auburn 19, Georgia 7; Auburn 27, Florida 6.

19,000 to See Louis Battle Uzcudun

Little Betting Is Done, but Interest Rises, Due to K. O. Angle.

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—Paulino Uzcudin, who was born in Regil, Guipuzoca, Spain, on May 3, 1899, and Joseph Louis (Barrow), who appeared on a cotton plantation at Lafayette, Ala., 15 years and 10 days later, will meet in a 15-round prizefight at the Garden next Friday, the 13th, before a capacity crowd of 19,000.

The Louis-Uzcudun fight has caught on like no other indoor heavyweight brawl of the past decade. This is not because an even contest impends but because the fans expect to have the pleasure of seeing somebody catch a few on the lug. The catching, of course, is expected to be done by the elderly Basque.

There's almost no betting on the outcome. If you thought Paulino had a chance you could write your own ticket. The scattered betting is on just one count: The number of rounds the fight will last.

Not one of New York's boxing writing tribe gives Paulino as much as a chance. The aging Basque, who's never been floored, hasn't won a fight since he decisioned Maxie Baer in 1931. Meantime, he has lost to such parties as Kingfish Levinsky and Primo Carnera (both of whom were cut to ribbons by Louis), and to Tommy Loughran, Mickey Walker, Max Schmeling and the late Ernie Schaaf.

So Friday's crowd will gather with the expectation of seeing a perfect ring workman cut down a valiant ringman who has never been floored.

3 Minnesota Aces In All-Star Game

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 7.—Three Minnesota stars, Dick Smith, All-America tackle, Vernon Oech, guard, and Fullback Sheldon Biese, today accepted invitations to play in the 11th annual East-West shrine benefit football game for crippled children at San Francisco New Year's Day.

The Gopher trio, the first to accept, notified Dick Hanley, former Northwestern coach, who will handle the East squad in collaboration with Andy Kerr of Colgate, of their decisions.

Hanley said that the rules permit only three men from one school on the squad, otherwise he would have taken as many Minnesota senior stars as would have accepted.

Cruickshank, Revolta Tie For Title

Virginia Shoots Final 68 for 280 Total; Cox's 287 in Money.

By the Associated Press.

ORLANDO, Fla., Dec. 7.—Sweeping aside a two-stroke edge Johnny Revolta held over him, Bobby Cruickshank, Richmond, Va., today tied the P. G. A. champion for the Orlando open golf championship with 280 for the 72 holes. They will meet in an 18-hole playoff tomorrow.

The Virginian was first to finish. He strode the final 18 holes with 33 out and 35 in for a 68, three under par. Because the field of 156 made the course so crowded, he played the last nine holes first and swept to his divided victory while the gallery crowded around the Milwaukee player he tied.

Revolta, now professional at the Miami-Biltmore, was paired with Ky Laffoon, Chicago, entering the final round. He held a stroke edge on his partner and two strokes on Cruickshank. He drew away from Laffoon by sinking a 20-foot putt at the tenth, then put his partner out of the running with par fours on the eleventh and twelfth and a birdie four on the fifteenth hole.

Winds Up With 73.

The P. G. A. titleholder blasted his chance to take the tournament when he went one over par, taking five, on the sixteenth, and shot into a trap on the eighteenth, ending with 73, scoring a total of 280.

Paul Runyan, White Plains, N. Y., and Laffoon both finished with 284's. Gene Kunes took fifth prize money with 285.

Horton Smith, Joplin, Mo., Zell Eaton, Oklahoma City, Okla., and Willie Macfarland, Miami, tied with 286.

Others finishing in the money were Harry Cooper, Chicago, Wiffy Cox, Washington, both with 287's; Tony Manero, Greensboro, N. C.; Dick Metz, Chicago; Frank Walsh, Braddock Spurns Schmeling Fight—Says 'Beat Louis First'

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—"There is only one direction in which the heavyweight champion can move—that's down."

The speaker was James J. Braddock, titular ruler of all the heavies. He sprawled on the divan of a hotel suite today and told why he wasn't leaping at a chance to fight Max Schmeling.

"In the first place, Max isn't much of a drawing card any more. I doubt if we could gross over $250,000—$350,000 at the most. And just suppose he managed to outpoint me—where would I be?

"No, sir. Once you get the title you may as well think straight. There is nothing else to win. The only thing a guy can do is cash in as much as he can while he's hot. Everybody's going to be licked some day.

"That's why I say when I defend my title it will be against the best man available. That looks to be Louis. Joe Gould and I have just come back from a long tour of the West. All we heard was Louis. He is the fighter in the public eye; not Schmeling.

"If Max really wants to get the

Today to Bring Vote After 'Double Dealing' Charge by Anti-Nazis

Group's Resolution Tabled and Debate Checked; O'Mahoney Makes Impassioned Plea for Boycott After Forces Lose in Poll, 61 to 55.

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Amateur Athletic Union's stand regarding the participation of the United States in the Olympic games at Berlin remained unsettled tonight after a stormy five-hour session which ended in a recess.

The bitter debate over the matter will continue at tomorrow's session, starting at 9 a. m., by a vote of the convention.

The group favoring participation in the Olympics, led by Avery Brundage, Chicago, president of the American Olympic Association and former president of the A. A. U., almost won a smashing victory today. They showed enough strength to table a resolution which opposed this country's participation in the Berlin games by at vote of 61 11-20 to 55 7-60.

Scorn Counter-Offer.

But in effort to carry off a complete coup the faction in favor of going on record as favoring participation offered a counter-resolution. It was introduced by Gustavus T. Kirby, New York, and favored participation, but went on record as opposing the Nazi regime in Germany and its principles.

The anti-group refused to have any part of this resolution, and before it was seconded or debated a counter-resolution was presented by Charles L. Ornstein, New York, member of the A. A. U. executive committee and delegate of the Jewish Welfare Board.

Ornstein's resolution was short and to the point—it favored a boycott of the Olympics games in Berlin. These two opposing resolutions—Kirby's and Ornstein's—precipitated the fireworks. Both sides were going after each other with every weapon at their disposal when the meeting had to be adjourned because of the late hour and the fact that the ballroom had been leased to another organization for dinner.

Antis Appeared Lost.

The anti-group, headed by Judge Jeremiah T. Mahoney, president of the A. A. U., appeared to be fighting a losing battle but were making every effort to swing the A. A. U. official sanction to non-participation.

It is well to remember that this A. A. U. convention itself has no voice regarding the participation of the United States at Berlin. The American Olympic committee already has voted in favor of participation, but a victory for the antis might succeed in bringing about a reconsideration of the acceptance of Germany's invitation to send a team to Berlin.

In introducing his resolution against participation, Ornstein charged the opposing faction with "double dealing," "broken promises" and "unfair methods."

No More Agreements.

"We came here in the spirit of a gentleman's agreement," said Ornstein. "We expected to debate this issue, starting at the appointed hour of 1:30, with each side allowed two hours to present its side. They broke their promises, and now place us in a position of dogs and throw a bone to us in the form of Kirby's resolution. That resolution is not satisfactory to those of us against participation. We will have no more agreements of any kind with them."

President Mahoney left the chair and, in an impassioned 20-minute plea, implored the delegates to vote for Ornstein's non-participation resolution.

"If the result means my death I care not," said Mahoney. "There is more at stake here than Olympic ideals. It's humanity itself. It is one of the most momentous questions ever presented to an athletic organization. We should give it sincere consideration and not pass it idly by. The active members of the A. A. U. wanted the matter threshed out on the floor, but they lost because of the vote of the allied groups.

"Tail to Hitler Kite."

"If we sidestep this issue irreparable damage is done to our great organization from which it can never recover. The Nazis want to make us a tail to the Hitler kite. They want Hitler to be able to

Methodists Rout Aggies By 24-0

Win 12th Game of Year, Final Hurdle Before Rose Bowl Tilt.

By the Associated Press.

COLLEGE STATION, Tex., Dec. 7.—Coach Madison Bell's stampeding Southern Mustangs will battle Stanford in the Rose Bowl with an untied and unbeaten record. Playing in rain and on a sloppy field, they completed their great record today by smothering Texas A. and M., 24 to 0, to win their first Southwest Conference championship since 1931.

It was the Mustangs' twelfth and final hurdle on a schedule that included some of the Nation's outstanding teams. They scored in the first few minutes when, elusive Robert Wilson, all-American halfback, raced through a broken field for 60 yards to a touchdown.

The long gallop fired the Methodist crew to a high fighting pitch and not once did A. and M. have a chance for victory.

Impress Scout.

Coach Claude E. (Tiny) Thornhill of Stanford, who scouted the Mustangs, remarked that they played an impressive game although he realized they never were under pressure.

Coach Bell, once his charges had a substantial advantage, used numerous reserves in order to save his regulars for New Year's Day at Pasadena.

It was a typical Southern Methodist game, sprinkled with long touchdown runs, daring forward passes and a field goal by giant Maurice Orr, a tackle.

After Wilson's run he soon passed to Tipton, end, who raced 20 yards for the second touchdown of the first period. Both times Orr place-kicked goal.

Boots Field Goal.

Southern Methodist made it 17 to 0 early in the third period when Orr booted a field goal from the 16-yard line after the Mustangs had been held for three downs.

The third touchdown came late in the fourth on a 28-yard pass, and Turner's line plunge from the 1-yard line. Weant kicked the goal.

Considering the inclement weather, Southern Methodist played a smooth, easy game. Wilson, Shelley Burt, Johnny Sprague and J. R. Smith constantly ripped through the Aggie line. J. C. "Iron Man" Wetsel and Truman Spain, guard and tackle, were outstanding in the forward wall. Numerous times they broke through and spilled Aggie ball carriers without gain.

8,000 See Mucho Gusto and Jinnee Win Charles Town Purses

Two Choices Score Under Palumbo

Mucho Gusto Always in Lead but Jinnee Just Saves Purse.

By Walter Haight,

A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN RACE TRACK, W. Va., Dec. 7.—Washington and Baltimore divided honors in the co-features of a week-end program which drew some 8,000 regular and occasional turf fans to this mountain race track this afternoon. The Baltimore Handicap was won by Mucho Gusto, owned by Philmore Sanford and trained by William Denham, both of the Nation's Capital. The Frederick Handicap went to Jinnee, owned by Mrs. M. N. Bond and trained by her son, J. Bowes Bond, both of Baltimore.

Mucho Gusto and Jinnee had something in common. Both were ridden by Sammy Palumbo, leading jockey hereabouts, and both were installed the favorite in their respective fields.

The races were run over a lightning fast track under a frowning sky. The weather, moderate when the program started, became cold and penetrating as the card progressed.

Race Over Fast Track.

Heavily played horses figured in both ends of the daily double which paid a mere $22 mutuel. Borsa won the first half and Hot Cake the second. The pool totaled $4,610.

One track record fell by the boards. Ree, trained by Chuck Frost, ran the 4½-furlong course in 50 seconds, to clip two-fifths of a second off Stool Pigeon's mark set earlier in the week.

Mucho Gusto was mucho the besto in his handicap victory. Palumbo sent him to the front and he made every post a winning one. Dona Dulcin and Sam Worthy did a lot of trying behind him, but had to be satisfied with second and third money, respectively. Mucho Gusto paid $3.60.

Battle All the Way.

Jinnee had to battle every inch of the way for his triumph. Palumbo finally brought him into the thick of the battle at the far turn. A couple of slashes from the whip and Jinnee was in front. But the son of Genie was to have no breathing spell. Postponement, which had a very rough trip, came around the leaders swinging into the stretch. He was cutting down Jinnee at every stride, but too late to change the top honors. Jinnee paid $5.20.

The two feature winners were Palumbo's thirteenth and fourteenth saddle success.

Borsa, a juvenile gelding with the appearance of a show horse, brought the day's second purse to Mrs. John Hay Whitney. Ridden by Johnny Shanks, Borsa led the battle most of the way with Genie Palatine, but finally shook off the filly in the final sixteenth. Surry, carrying 122 pounds, was third in the field of eight. Borsa was not a secret and paid a $5.20 mutuel.

Hot Cake Easy Victor.

Sammy Palumbo rode his twelfth winner of the meeting on Hot Cake, $3 favorite, in the third race. Hot Cake ran along with Flageolet for the first 7 furlongs and then drew out to a long lead to win with speed in reserve. Flageolet was second and Annimessic was third.

Fileaway brought some joy to the long-shot players in the sixth race. She hopped out of No. 1 gate and it was a case of "catch me if you can" from that point to the finish. There were no catchers. Tuleyries Wand made a game, but futile, attempt. Lulu Lite gained enough momentum to be third. Fileaway brought at $25.60 mutuel.

Virginia A. C. Will Play at Anacostia

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Dec. 7.—The Virginia A. C. football team, boasting a record marred by only two defeats in the last three seasons, will invade Anacostia tomorrow for their final battle of the year with the Anacostia Eagles.

The Alexandrians, who are conceded to be one of the best 150-pound teams in this section, have been hard at work all week for tomorrow's game and will hold a last-minute workout tomorrow morning on the Shipyard Field.

Injured in last week's clash with the Southeast Boys Club, "Fuzzy" Foltz, stellar blocking back, will not see service; the rest of the squad, however, is intact.

The Alexandria Fraters tomorrow will remain idle for the first Sunday since they opened their season.

The Alexandria Yellow Jackets and the Washington Navy Yard elevens, colored teams, will meet tomorrow at Baggett's Stadium.

Fork Union Routs Devitt Prep Eleven

Devitt assumed the offensive in the early going, at one time booming to the Fork Union 37-yard line as the result of Zinkievich's plunging and a 15-yard run back of a punt by Len Askin. Fork Union had not yet reached Devitt territory when the Washington team struck for a touchdown, Zinkievich intercepted a pass by Demuro and galloping 19 yards to the Fork Union 15-yard line.

Zinkievich's pass to Jim Hardy was too long but an offside penalty against the Cadets gave Devitt the ball on the 10-yard marker.

Zinkiesvich plunged 3 yards and then added four more. He drove powerfully through right tackle to score standing up on the next play and passed to Hardy who caught the ball on his stomach for the extra point.

Fork Union then opened a 54-yard touchdown march, a pass from Demuro to Olzack for 15 yards figuring largely in the advance and putting the ball on the 12-yard line. John Dixon hit Demuro for a 2-yard loss but the shifty quarterback fell back to pass on the next play, could find no receiver and ran around his left end to score standing up. Jim Humphrey, of Cedar Bluff, Va., plunged for the extra point to tie the score shortly before the half ended.

Smith Intercepts Pass.

The Virginians, unbeaten by a prep school team all season, were not long in breaking the deadlock. Jim Smith intercepted a pass by Zinkievich and ran 35 yards to the Devitt 15-yard line making the tackle which prevented a touchdown. Demuro and Humphrey made it a first down on the four yard line and it took Fork Union four downs to make the score, Humphrey finally plunging from the six-inch line for the touchdown.

Devitt advanced to the Fork Union line shortly afterward after Paul Dietrich, center, had recovered a Fork Union fumble at midfield. A 15-yard penalty set the Washington team back, and Jim Hardy, hindered by a convalescing broken finger, dropped a pass from Kinkievich on the 7-yard line to end the last serious Devitt threat.

Midway in the last quarter, Fork Union opened another scoring drive of 69 yards, the last 45 of which were swiftly accounted for by the elusive Demuro, who ran off tackle, reversed his field, outraced Askin, the Devitt safety man, and twisted away from Hardy who almost caught him on the 5-yard line.

It was Demuro again who intercepted Zinkievich's pass and ran 31 yards to the Devitt 2-yard marker to lead up to the last touchdown. A 15-yard penalty against Devitt for clipping advanced the leather to the six-yard line and it took only two plays for Smith, Fork Union's 204-pound fullback, to plunge for the touchdown.

Pro Basket Ball Season Opens Here Today

CLARK GRIFFITH, snowy-thatched owner of the Washington Baseball Club, will toss up the first ball this afternoon at the Heurich Gymnasium in the Heurich-Bridgeton, N. J., game which will pry open the 1935-36 District professional basketball season.

With Griffith making the throw at approximately 2:30 p. m., game starting time, a number of other well-known sporting figures, including Bucky Harris, Washington baseball manager; Nick Altrock, comedian-coach; Everett B. Eynon, jr., baseball club secretary, will be on hand for the ceremonies.

Efforts are being made to have Commissioner George Allen, an ardent basketball fan, attend.

In the preliminary game the Coffey Sales Co. and Olmsted Grill will meet at 1:30.

Camden Last Year.

The Bridgeton team, known as the Bears, is the same outfit which played under Camden's colors last season. At present the Bears are riding the crest of a winning wave in the Eastern Professional League, having bounced into the lead the other night with a victory in Philadelphia.

Danny Danowitz, who played with the Elks and Moose, is a guard of unusual ability, and Phil Ross, guard, is formerly of Long Island University, and Jimmy McMonigle, forward, was a member of the famous Nativity Club, Philadelphia champions. Bud Clancy, forward, played with Penn State for three years, and Charlie Mosicant was center on LaSalle's great team. Lou Foreman was acquired from the Philadelphia Sphas. Albie Weiner, youngest member of the team, started playing pro basketball at 16.

Four Veterans Back.

Four members of last year's high-powered Heurich team will answer the starting whistle. They are Moon Evans and Bucky Buscher, forwards; Joe Croson, center, who starred on Duke's team; Ralph Bennie, guard. The newcomer is Whitty Wilson, former Pittsburgh University star, who will play guard with Bennie.

In reserve will be Everett Russell, former George Washington University ace; Roy Yowell, former Maryland luminary and Tiny Ingham, center on Sholl's team last winter. The Heurich gym is located at 26th and Water streets northwest.

Biff Annexes Handicap At Fair Grounds Track

Fair Grounds, New Orleans, Dec. 7 (AP).—Biff, four-year-old gelding owned by F. Ianni, carried top weight of 114 pounds and made the Fair Grounds track look fast this afternoon when he won the Gulf Coast Handicap at six furlongs and reeled off the distance in 1:11 2-5, just a fifth of a second off the track record made by Top o' The Morning in 1918.

Well handled by Mel Knight, Biff ran E. Signa's The Pelican off his feet and came on away from him in the stretch to win handily. C. W. Pershall's Judge Leer was third and B. Hernandez's Indiantown fourth.

Jim Browning Meets Szabo Thursday

Both Allegedly Rassle for the Love of Rassling, Not for Cash.

By George Considine.

SPURRED on by last week's world champeenship match, Promoter Joe Turner has invited another herd of rasslers to perform for the folks come Thursday night at his cauliflower coliseum. What with Friday, the thirteenth, coming the next day and one thing and another, it's beginning to look like a mighty tough week-end.

In the feature bout (that's the one after the intermission) Lord Jim Browning, former world champion, will frolic under the kliegs with Sandor Szabo, the Hungarian Clark Gable. This will mark the first local appearance of Gentleman Jim since he worked so enthusiastically on Jack Donovan's shoulder that Promoter Turner threw precedent to the winds and a towel into the center of activity.

The story goes that Szabo has been showered with movie contracts by producers, who would commercialize on the gent's physical perfection and fine-speaking voice. But it seems that Sandor has his own ideas of the manner in which he prefers to keep the wolf from the door.

Proving that rassling gets a definite grip upon you, Browning5s advance guard contends that the former champion is the richest journeyman in the industry and that he continues to work just because he likes to grunt. Perhaps the management should bill the impending imbroglio thusly: Browning vs. Szabo, Art For Art's Sake.

Semifinally, Dean Detton, the refined ruffian from the University of Utah, will ply his trade with a certain George Manich, while in the half-hour howls Joe Cox exchanges pleasantries with Abe Kashey and Charlie Strack has been accorded another night's work, this time with Doug Wycoff.

Braddock Spurns Schmeling Fight

title back, let him do like the rest of us had to do. That is, fight his way through the contenders and prove himself the logical challenger. Then I'll fight him. All he has to do is beat Joe Louis."

Joe Gould, the champ's manager, couldn't keep still any longer.

"Wait a minute, Jim," he urged. "Let me say something."

"When Jimmy beat Max Baer for the title last summer, Schmeling laughed and wanted to know 'Who is Braddock?' Well, we're asking now, 'Who is Schmeling?' What right has he to come over here and demand a championship bout?

"No sir, we're in the saddle now and we can say who we'll fight. We want the guy who will draw the biggest gate. Let Louis and Schmeling decide it among themselves."

So, while Schmeling, taken back by the somewhat cool reception he received Friday, enjoyed the six-day bike race; while Madison Square Garden sent out feelers for a Schmeling-Braddock match, and while Mike Jacobs, of the Twentieth Century Sporting Club, promised the German a gate of a million and a quarter if he'd sign with the Negro, the heavyweight situation narrowed down to this:

Schmeling wants to fight Braddock for the championship. The German simply detests the idea of having first to hurdle the hard-hitting Louis.

Braddock wants Louis because he believes the colored boy will outdraw Schmeling two to one. (But he'll take the German if he beats Louis).

Louis wants either man or both. He just loves to fight.

The belief grew along Forty-ninth street tonight that Schmeling will sail for Germany on December 15 without signing to meet anybody.

STOOL PIGEON was rushed hard to reach the front, displayed good speed while setting the pace but could not withstand the winner's rush. LADY BUCK went in the thick of contention and continued strongly in the final drive. CLIFTON'S MARIE saved a lot of ground all the way and finished stoutly. SCOTCH AGE was unable to enter contention. MISS PATCHES was outrun. TRYING weakened early.

BORSA, hustled vigorously to get to the front, saved ground while setting a fast pace, met persistent efforts from GENIE PALATINE in the first six furlongs and came out slowly under severe pressure at the end. GENIE PALATINE handled her weight nicely, raced in near pursuit of the winner, but faltered in the closing furlong. SURRY, hard ridden while holding a prominent position outfinished CHAMBERSBURGER when the real test came. CHAMBERSBURGER went well placed in the early running, but weakened when put to a drive. FEUETTE could not engage the leaders at any stage. The others were outrun.

HOT CAKE took an easy lead after going a half-mile, opened up a winning lead and was never threatened in the closing stages. FLAGEOLET could not withstand the winner but was easily best of the others. ANIMESSIC worked his way up on the outside, closed gamely, but could not reach the leaders. PLAYOFF held a forward position for the first seven furlongs, but weakened under severe urging in the closing drive. COAT TAILS raced in spots. POST BRIGADE was never able to reach contention. DONA DULCIN improved her position on the outside, gained stoutly in the last five-sixteenths, but could not threaten seriously in the final issue. SAM WORTHY, strongly ridden from the start, held on with good courage to outstay SUNNED. Latter closed gamely in the last half-mile after being outrun early. JINNEE, well up from the start, moved around the leaders on the final turn, drew out in the stretch, but had to be kept under pressure to the finish. POSTPONEMENT, slow to leave the barrier, reached contention quickly, circled the leaders when put to a drive and was wearing the winner down. SPARTAN LADY lacked early speed, but moved up stoutly when called upon and finished with good courage. MASTER LAD, reserved in the early racing made a bold bid on the final turn, but weakened. LATIVICH could not get up. WISE KING had early speed, but stopped, as did CANTERSINE.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FILEAWAY, $25.60 $10.40, $5.60; TULEYRIES WAND, $3.80 $2.80; LULU LITE, $3.40.

FILEAWAY assumed command with the break, moved clear after going six furlongs, but tired through the final quarter-mile and had to be hard ridden to withstand TULEYRIES WAND. Latter, holding a forward position from the beginning, responded to punishment and finished wearing the winner down gradually. LULU LITE, forced to race on the outside, bettered her position steadily, but could not make up any ground on the first two in the final drive. SPERO lacked speed to maintain a forward position saved ground, and came gamely at the end. RED LABEL raced strongly for six furlongs, then tired. SOUND MONEY lost ground on the turns IDLE FLIRT would not extend herself. FAN began tiring early.

SEVENTH RACE—One and a half miles plus 80 yards. Purse, $300; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good and fast. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:39. Off at once. Winner, R. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WORTHINGTON, $4.00 $2.80, $2.20; BAY WRACK, $3.60, $2.40; GOLDEN PLAY, $2 80.

WORTHINGTON moved into an easy lead at once, raced restrained for the first mile, was shaken up mildly thereafter and drew out at will. BAY WRACK, kept within striking distance of the leaders moved up gamely when put to a drive, slipped through on the inside of GOLDEN PLAY and outstayed the latter for second. GOLDEN PLAY raced strongly while forcing the pace, but weakened in the last quarter-mile. THE WORKER was hard ridden all the way, but could not engage the leaders. GEORGE JESSEL was never a dangerous factor. ON TRIAL was done after seven furlongs. KING BIRD trailed far back throughout.

T. C. U. Downs Santa Clara By 10 to 6

Texans Pass Foes Dizzy; Freak Play Nets Home Eleven Touchdown.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 7 (AP).—Texas Christian defeated Santa Clara, 10 to 6, today in a thrill-a-minute game.

Taking a page from the experience of Southern Methodist, which beat University of Southern California at Los Angeles a few weeks ago, the Horned Frogs passed their Santa Clara rivals dizzy. They hawked the ball with an accuracy that brought cheers from 20,000 fans.

Two minutes after the Santa Clara kick-off Texas Christian converted a fumble into a touchdown. Quarterback Sammy Baugh opened the Southwest team's bag of tricks by quick-kicking on the first down. Hal Seramin chased the ball as it bounced along. He got his fingers on it, but he let it get away.

Pass Brings Touchdown.

Behind 10 to 0, Santa Clara turned a freak play into a touchdown. On T. C. U.'s 26-yard line, Montgomery, sub right half, was carrying the ball when it zipped from his arms after a hard tackle. The ball popped into the air, and Dutton, Santa Clara left end, caught it on the fly.

He started goalward. George Kline, Texas left half, overtook him, but not before Dutton flipped the oval back to Dowd, sub right guard. Dowd had a clear field ahead of him and sped over the line.

Fullback Falaschi failed on the place kick.

Devitt Places Four, Gonzaga Three on Post's All-Prep Team

New England Youths Win Berths

Two St. Alban's Boys on Team, Only Players to Repeat.

By John R. Vosburgh.

THAT football players are running a close second to political job-seekers as alien residents of the Nation's Capital is fairly well substantiated by The Post's 1935 All-Prep football team herewith submitted to the public gaze. Only 4 of the 11 young men representing the pick of private school football park their hats in Washington the year round. The other seven hail from Hyattsville and points North.

As a matter of fact, New England furnishes as many members of this All-Star outfit as does Washington itself, but if it be any compensation to local patriots, Jake Foulois, St. Alban's All-Prep tackle, is from Washington, Conn. Incidentally, Devitt Prep displaced St. Alban's this year as the chief source of All-Prep material, contributing four members.

Gonzaga, which supplied two selections last season, crashes through today with three while Bullis and St. John's each clung to their quota of one contribution apiece. The St. Alban's choices were the only two members of The Post's 1934 All-Prep team to repeat. Foulois, captain of the team, hung grimly to his tackle honors despite stiff competition from his teammate, Charlie Vetterlein, while Alexander (Zan) Carver careened along all season at a devastating pace to retain custody of his quarterback laurels.

Two Classes of Schools.

For those who may be unaware of it, there are two classes of prep schools in and around Washington which doesn't make selecting an All-Prep team easier at all. Devitt and Bullis each permit high school graduates to play which does not hold true at Gonzaga, St. John's, St. Alban's, Georgetown Prep, Landon and Friends. Hence, often a Devitt All-Prep could be in a class, both from the standpoint of talent, age and experience, above that of players from the other schools.

Chief of these older players in the line were Devitt's rugged ends, Bill Patterson, of Newark, Del., and Jim Hardy, of Medford, Mass. Only one end, Jim Brew, of Gonzaga, actually approached this pair for smashing defensive play.

Patterson, a former high school teammate of Maryland's All-District end, Vic Willis, truly fills the description of a "great" high school wingman. Hardy, an even better pass catcher, was virtually a reproduction of Patterson defensively. Brother of Red Hardy, Georgetown center, Jim is due to enter Georgetown in the fall. Dick Smith, Friends School's big wingman, performed with better-than-average results, though confined to one of the weaker teams.

Too Many Tackles.

There were too many good tackles from an All-Prep chooser's standpoint. Rube Hayman, the ageing Devitt tackle who has played at Roosevelt, Central and the University of Richmond Freshmen, was an unavoidable choice but it was a question as to who should take the other tackle post. Hayman, still improving, continued to bear out the quality shown in 1933 when he was picked as All-High by The Post.

Foulois and Vetterlein, of St. Alban's, and Frank Fenwick, of Gonzaga, were virtually on a par. Bob Williamson, Landon's 220-pounder, was in a class not far distant. Foulois, a Philadelphian, again led the Saints through a highly successful season. Fenwick, a 185-pound husky, still has one more year at Gonzaga, but is already the cynosure of eyes of numerous collegiate scouts. Foulois will enter West Point upon graduation, much to the dismay of Coach Tom Hamilton, of Navy.

In Carl Hechmer and Larry Widmayer, Washington furnished a couple of guards to Gonzaga whom Coach Orrell Mitchell believes were the pick of the city and several other coaches agreed with him. Only two touchdowns were scored by rushing against Gonzaga all season and they were around the ends. The middle of the Purple's line was impenetrable with Hechmer and Widmayer standing like a couple of twin Gibraltars. Though light, each has a tremendous drive, and ran interference as though they might have been a pair of truck horses.

Centers of exceptional quality were conspicuous by their absence, only Harold Williamson, of Bullis, standing out sufficiently for real all-prep material. The Brockton, Mass., boy will enter the Naval Academy in the fall. His coach, Pat Mahoney, former Western Maryland player, characterized him as a knock-down, drag-out football player and line backer-up who could play guard as well as he could center and whose passes were a marvel of reliability throughout the season. Berwin Morse, of Georgetown Prep, was a well-equipped, effective pivot man, but lacked the attitude actually necessary for an outstanding gridster.

In the backfield, Carver, Alban's triple-threater, literally ran wild to score 77 points, second high-point total run up by a scholastic player in the Washington section. Adam Zinkievich, of Devitt, was a certain choice, his passing, punting and running stamping him as the greatest prep school back Washington has seen in years. The blond Pole from Worcester scored an average of 16 points for each of the three games he played.

Down the Fairway . .

By Dave Herman.

THE master was seated in his comfortable chair in the golf shop at Columbia Country Club. Nearby four men were engaged in a torrid game of rummy. One of 'em was that great big likable fellow, Reds Bannagan, the golfers' best friend at the club.

Outside the North wind howled. It was so cold that nary a golfer ventured forth on the course.

The master, who is accustomed to playing his daily rounds, was chafing under the restraint of his one-day confinement.

"These bleak, dog days get under my skin," the master remarked. "I wish summer would stay here all the time. You can't play on days like this unless you want to freeze to death"

The master was right. The master was none other than Fred McLeod, the little Columbia professional, who knows his golf like his A. B. C's, and who in our opinion is one of the best instructors in the country.

"This is a great day to sit down and reminisce and talk about golf—past, present and future—" we told him.

"Guess you're right," he replied, adding, "well, get it off your chest son."

"Tell us, Fred, who are the greatest golfers of all time?" we inquired as the master removed his cap, smacked his lips and took a deep breath.

Thus was struck up an interesting conversation.

The master's voice:

"Greatest golfers of all time. Hmmm, Let's see. Well here they are:"

"Harry Vardon, Bobby Jones, Willie Anderson, Walter Hagen, Gene Sarazen, Harold Hilton, Johnny Ball, Fred Tait, Jim Braid, J. H. Taylor, Lawson Little, Tommy Armour and Chick Evans.

"I should also include Tom Morris, sr., the father of golf, and his son, Tom Morris, jr., who between them won eight British Open titles starting back 1862, but that was before my time when golf was in its infancy."

Vardon Placed at Top of List

AT the top of his all-time list McLeod placed the peerless Englishman, Vardon, winner of six British and one American Open crown. His fine friend, Bobby Jones, only man ever to capture all four major championships in a single year, he placed number two.

Strictly a diplomat, McLeod would not put the rest of his golfing immortals in numerical order.

"It is better," he said, "to have Willie Anderson, who won four American Open championships; Hagen, Sarazen and Braid in class three.

"In class four there would be Taylor and Armour.

"In class five, Hilton, Ball, Tait, Little and Evans."

And there you have the cream of golfdom's crop starting with the year 1860, when a Mr. Park, of Musselburgh, won the first British Open on record. That was just one year before the start of the Civil War. Imagine.

McLeod knows whereof he speaks. He has seen the Vardon swing, the Jones swing, and he has observed the play of both men in championships. Jones was stepping into the picture when Vardon was stepping out. Vardon was brilliant, spectacular, steady as a smooth running clock, McLeod will tell you. Jones was the greatest putter of the two, he says.

You debate it, now.

While Willie Anderson is a name forgotten in the mad golfing swirl by many, he is still one of the greatest in McLeod's opinion. He was a whizz in his day, a powerhouse on the course, on the type of Hagen, the Columbia Scot declares.

Little Breaks Hilton's Record.

FROM 1901 to 1905 he was the big shot in American Open championships. Why repeat the feats of Hagen and Sarazen, two of the greatest golfers of the past decade—Hagen, four time British Open, two-time American Open champion, and Sarazen two-time former American Open ruler.

Hilton, Ball, Tait, Little and Evans are amateurs put in the same class. Hilton was the first man to win the British and American amateurs in the same year, and also won the British Open several times. Two years ago Little came along to win the British and American amateur. He repeated this past season to break all existing records.

Tait, killed in the Boer War, was the star amateur of his day, having won three British crowns.

Taylor and Braid won nine British Open crowns between them. It was Taylor who played with reckless abandon on the course. He believed in blazing away for the hole, instead of attempting to play safe. No coward of a golfer was J. H. Taylor.

And Johnny Ball, not content with winning four British titles, won the British Open before he retired.

Evans was honored because he was one of the few Americans ever to win an Open and Amateur championship.

"I realize that courses and equipment have changed since Hagen, Sarazen, Evans, Jones, Little left their indelible impressions on the golfing public," McLeod stated. "Still, in their day, Vardon, Anderson, Hilton, Ball, Tait, Braid and Taylor were remarkable golfers.

Pine Valley Considered Best Course by Architect.

ARTHUR W. TILLINGHAST, famous American golf architect, who was in Washington the other day, thinks that Pine Valley's golf course is the best in the world. The doctor of the newly created P. G. A. course clinic, laid out two of the holes on this layout, which will be the scene of the 1936 Walker Cup matches.

Hoylake, near Liverpool, where Bob Jones won the British Open the same year he completed his "Grand Slam"—1930—is tops among the European courses, Tillinghast claims.

With respect to the retrenchment programs put on by golf clubs throughout the country, Tillinghast said that in many cases where courses were neglected, Mother Nature took care of the situation beautifully. It was surprising, he said, to see how fine these greens and fairways looked.

This proved, he declared, that it is not necessary to spend a lot of money to keep up the courses when nature is willing to lend a helping hand.

Izaac Walton Group Elects Reckord

Baltimorean to Succeed Dr. Magee; Juniors Meet Dec. 12.

By Jack Hawley.

M. K. RECKORD, well-known Baltimorean, last night was elected president of the Regional Council of the Izaac Walton League which embraces the States of Maryland and Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Vitally interested in conservation, and a member of the local chapter of the league, Mr. Reckord for years was general manager of the Chicago division, which reached its all-time peak in membership under his leadership.

He succeeds Dr. W. d'Arcy Magee, national vice president of the Isaac Walton League of America. and president of the local chapter, who stepped down graciously from his chair due to the press of duties with the national organization.

Reuben Riggs, past president of the Rockville chapter, cashier of the Montgomery National Bank, and H. H. MacGubbin, Baltimore broker were elected vice presidents temporarily until the January meeting.

Dr. E. Russell Cook, of Baltimore, was unanimously elected secretary-treasurer. His idea in starting a Junior Isaac Walton League in the school system of America is outstanding.

On December 12 at 8 p. m. at the Montgomery Blair High School, the installation of officers of the junior league will take place among the 86 boys. Noted speakers will attend, including Dr. Magee.

In preparation for the forthcoming national convention at the Raleigh Hotel on February 4 under the auspices of the American Wild Life Institute, the regional council is calling a special meeting of all sportsmen on January 11. Dinner at 6:30 will be followed by a meeting at 8 p. m. Those interested in fishing and hunting have been invited to attend.

Rock Creek Links Improved; Unfair Rolls Are Eliminated

IMPROVEMENTS designed to speed up play on Rock Creek's course were announced yesterday by Ed Burns, manager.

"The heavy traffic hasn't been causing this tortoise-like play on the course," Burns declared. "As soon as all the unfair rolls are eliminated, you will notice a big difference in the time it takes a golfer to travel 9 or 18 holes."

A good bit of the work has been completed. The rest of the improvements will be made in the next few months.

So, by next spring, you won't find the Rock Creek layout as hilly as it used to be, because many big mounds will have been abolished. The turf has been smoothed out on a level with the fairway. You won't have to spend 20 minutes looking for your ball in the woods, for much of the sloping ground which helped kick the sphere into the forest has been removed.

Here are the changes made by Burns:

On the fourth hole, 336, dirt has been placed all along the bumpy spots 200 yards down the fairway. A ramp has been placed along the edge of the woods on the right to keep the ball from kicking in. The hollow places on the right of the green have been filled in, thus making the slope gradual instead of sharp.

That ditch on the fifth, 216, "Sixteenth street" hole, stretching from tee to green on the right of the fairway, has been covered over. All hollow spots 180 yards from tee of the sixth, 327, have been filled in, making it level with the tee.

Dirt has been inserted on the right-hand side of the fairway of the eighth, 150 yards from the tee.

A new trap is being placed on the left-hand side of the tenth green to catch a bad hit second shot that ordinarily would end up in the deep woods.

A series of traps has been built on the right-hand side of the twelfth green (three of 'em) to catch sliced balls headed for the woods. Just short of the green the hollow places are being filled in.

Along the edge of the woods of the thirteenth, 50 yards past tee and running thence to the green, mounds have been constructed. The fairways have been built up on a level with the mounds, eliminating the dangerous slope to the right.

The ground on the right and left side of the fairway of the fourteenth has been built up to keep shots from rolling into the woods. The slope on the right, too, has been abolished.

No. 15, 451, par 5, most dangerous on the course, which is downhill and uphill, sharp dogleg to left, will witness the smoothing over of rough spots and the leveling off of the fairways to keep the ball from kicking into the woods.

New tees also are being constructed.

New parking space in back of the second and fourth greens is another feature of the improvements.

East Potomac, sister course of Rock Creek, also is being improved considerably, with all fairways to be leveled off, all low places filled in, on courses D, F, B and G. Present plans are to eliminate the short, 200-yard hole on G and substitute a short hole back of No. 2 on G.

Taylor Speaks At Clinic of Courtmen

IN the second session of the annual National Capital Basket ball Clinic, held last night in the Y. M. C. A. men's gym, Charles (Chuck) Taylor, former professional player with the Buffalo Germans and recognized as one of the outstanding authorities on the game, lectured on fundamentals. He was assisted by the George Washington University varsity squad.

Taylor laid particular stress on the importance of footwork and the development of the wrists. He said that much can be learned from the boxing game, proving by practical demonstration that what is needed by most basket ball players is the combined ability to keep on the toes and to throw with long graceful strokes.

Washington was one of the stops on Taylor's extensive itinerary, which began in mid-October and which will eventually take him to every state in the country before the end of February. Tomorrow he is scheduled to speak to basketball enthusiasts in Charlotte, N. C.

McLeod Posts Ringer Score Of 39, Including Two Aces

By Dave Herman.

TWO holes-in-one, a double eagle, nine eagles and six birdies—it's a 39 for 18 holes

Such is Fred McLeod's all-time ringer score at Columbia Country Club.

This incredible score is 31 under par for one of the toughest courses in the country.

The Columbia professional, still acknowledged the greatest trap-shot player in the world, has played the first nine in 21, and the back side in 18.

His closest pursuers for ringer honors among the professionals in the District are Davey Thomson, the wee Washington Golf and Country Club Scot, and Danny Burton, Army and Navy's red-haired pro, who boast of 44s each.

George Diffenbaugh is proud of his ringer card at Indian Spring. It's a 22, 23—45. Diffenbaugh cut down his score considerably last season by registering eagle deuces on the first, where he holed out a 100-yard niblick shot; the tenth, where he smacked in another healthy niblick, and the 423-yard twelfth, where he fired a 200-yard brassie second into the cup.

Eagles on the tenth, fifteenth and sixteenth this year helped Thomson, while Burton failed to improve his ringer score.

With only three eagles to show, the rest birdies, Al Tredor, of Manor, reports a ringer of 24—24—48, while Cliff Spencer, of Beaver Dam, and Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional, have scored even 50s.

McLeod, Thomson and Spencer are the only pros reporting aces. Diffenbaugh and Mackenzie have never holed out in one shot on any course.

Burton holds something of a record. He has scored six eagles on the first hole and nine on the second.

McLeod's ambition is to replace every birdie on his ringer score with an eagle before he retires from golf. He can do it if he holes many more like that 200-yard second shot on the 503-yard twelfth for a 2.

Thomson is 26 under par; Burton, 28 under; Diffenbaugh, 26 under; Tredor, Mackenzie and Spencer, 22 under.

Clipping Is Ruled Ground for Suit

By the Associated Press.

Chester, Pa., Dec. 7.—Justice of the Peace J. Albert Northam, after watching a demonstration, has ruled "clipping from the rear" in a football game is good ground for an assault and battery charge.

He held Harold Brewster, onetime Pennsylvania State College end, for the grand jury on that charge and that ground after a hearing last night.

Brewster's accuser was Walter Layer, former Pennsylvania Military College athlete and middle Atlantic States amateur heavyweight boxing champion.

Layer brought the "clipping from the rear" charge after Northam held him for the grand jury in an assault and battery action brought by Brewster.

It all started in a game October 20 between the Millmont A. C. and the Chester professionals.

Anti-Nazis Lose in First Skirmish, but Await Vote Scheduled Today.

boast to the world press that this country participated in the Olympic games with the full approval of the United States and in full accord with Nazi principles."

Leading the battle for the defeat of Ornstein's resolution, Brundage presented a mass of facts—letters, documents, and opinions about the situation in Germany and other European countries regarding the Olympics. He spoke in a slow, calm voice in comparison to Mahoney's impassioned plea.

Brundage raised several questions which opened the eyes of the delegates. One of them was: "Where is all the money coming from to pay the expenses for the propaganda which is being distributed throughout the country against participation?"

$1,000,000 Reported Spent.

"I've heard it said that $1,000,000 will be spent to keep our athletes from competing at Berlin," said Brundage. "Since when did money enter into the Olympics and amateur athletics? What would our founders think if they knew this?" (Here he mentioned several names of deceased A. A. U. leaders.)

Brundage said he believed a vote by the A. A. U. against participation at Berlin would wreck the organization.

"And I don't think you want that," he said.

Every competent sports leader in the world approves of participation at Berlin, Brundage said and then asked:

"Are they to be insulted?"

The entire argument against participation is based on misconception, according to Brundage. He said that no good could be gained by staying at home.

"The moral issues in this case can't be cured by boycott, coercion or fiat," he said. "The participation of all races, colors and creeds at Berlin will do more good than anything else. Regardless of whether we participate, the games will go on, Hitler will go on and the Nazis will go on. We should vote in favor of participation for the good of amateur sport and nothing else."

D.C. Delegates Vote 3-2 Against Boycott

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—The District of Columbia's delegates to the National A. A. U. Convention were split, 3 to 2, on the vote today to table the resolution opposing United States entrance into the Olympic games in Germany.

Favoring the boycott were James Sullivan and Edwin Rosenblum. Opposed to the boycott were Winfree Johnson, William Russell and A. Earle Weeks. The vote of James McNamara was apparently unrecorded.

Louisiana State Coach Favors Olympic Trip

Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 7 (AP). Bernie Moore, Louisiana State University's famous track—and football—coach and member of the Olympic coaching staff, today favored American participation in the Berlin contests and so did his athletes.

"I don't se why they don't quit this foolishness," Moore said, commenting on the controversy over American participation.

"This arguing isn't going to get us anywhere. We know we're going to be in the Olympics."

Sun Radio Booters To Meet Littoria

First-Half League Hopes Are at Stake Today.

In the leading Recreation Soccer League contest at 2:30 p. m. today Sun Radio—present champion and league leader—opposes Littoria, holder of second position and last season's runner-up on Rosedale Playground. This is the first meeting of these teams this season and will just about determine the first-half winner, Sun Radio being 1 point ahead.

The league champions have a clean record with five tournament victories and a drawn game with H. M. S. York to its credit, while Littoria has dropped 1 point by reason of its tie with Occoquan last week.

Mitchell Brothers will oppose Sabaudia on Benning Field at 1 o'clock in a preliminary to the Southeastern League game between Heurich Brewers and Fernwood, of Baltimore, and the Occoquan eleven will play Silver Spring on the Montgomery Blair High School field at 2:30.

Delaney Fights Godwin Here Tomorrow

Young Heavy to Replace Mitchell, Ill From Cold in Head.

AL DELANEY, nee Otto Borchuk, the heavyweight who is credited by Joe Louis himself with dealing the Brown Bomber the hardest smack he ever received in the ring, yesterday was signed to substitute for Terry Mitchell against Bob Godwin in the main event at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

The bout has been scheduled for an eight-round distance, instead of the usual 10 rounds, at the insistence of Delaney's manager. Only 20 years old, the Buffalo lad previously has been forced, by the ruling in New York that no minor may box more than six rounds, to confine himself to bouts scheduled for half a dozen three-minute periods.

Forced to seek a substitute for Mitchell, who was laid low by a bad cold, Ahearn chose Delaney despite his comparative inexperience, on the strength of a great record as a professional.

Although stopped by Louis, Borchuk hit the Negro sensation a blow in the mouth in a Detroit bout that chipped off one of Joe's teeth and had him the closest to being knocked out that he has been in the squared circle. Louis himself freely admits this, in fact, broadcast the fact to the world in a radio talk from Washington last summer.

Matched with Buddy Baer, Madcap Maxie's big little brother, Delaney dropped the younger brother of the former champion for a nine count—the first time Buddy ever had been off his feet.

Delaney also has boxed draws with Tommy Loughran, Lew Scozza and Georgie Nichols—all former lightheavyweight champions who later figured quite prominently in the heavyweight picture. Loughran, it will be recalled, won from Max Baer and Scozza holds the only knockout victory over the present heavyweight champion, Jim Braddock.

Delaney was under consideration as an opponent for Marty Gallagher later in the month, but Marty held out for a guarantee of $800, which Promoter Joe Turner and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn felt they could not afford to pay.

In a semifinal scheduled for eight rounds, Joe Temes, the Florida Greek, will meet Ray Borree, considered by many the greatest featherweight developed in the South recently. Borree holds a one-round knockout over Baby Miller and now is attached to the Godwin stable in Herald Harbor.

Bob Lowry and Mike Scipio, a pair of willing middleweights, are down for a six-round preliminary, and opening fours will find Charley Rondo swapping swats with Tony Livingston and Stan Carrier meeting Joe Sibley.

Numerous Deals Loom as Big League Sessions Open Tuesday

Connie Mack Center of Interest

A's Deals and Fate of Browns and Braves Hold Spotlight.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—A baseball player market that promises to shatter all known records for rumors, denials and ultimate deals opens in Chicago Tuesday as soon as the hotel switchboard girls finish their "get up calls" to the traders, buyers and sellers.

Two whole ball clubs—the Orphan Boston Braves and the St. Louis Browns—and a million dollars worth of player talent are on the mart, which will be kept open for 24 hours a day for almost a week. Every club, represented by three or four officials as a backstop lest some one of them gets talked into trading a star for buttons, will circulate around with well-formed shopping tours.

For the fifth straight year, Connie Mack, grand patriarch of the Philadelphia Athletics, and Branch Rickey, farm boss for the St. Louis Cardinals, will be the central figures. Forced to develop stars and then sell them because of lack of patronage in their home parks, they are expected to release the floodgates for a score or more of Big League deals. It's a cinch that no deals of importance will be announced until the shoppers have finished their raids on the Athletic and Cardinal "bargain counters."

Big Deal Expected.

The aged Connie is expected to announce the sale of one of the most sought-after quarters in baseball—First Baseman Jimmy Foxx, Infielders Frank "Pinky" Higgins and Eric McNair and Outfielder Roger Cramer. Higgins is expected to go to the Yankees, McNair and Cramer to the Red Sox and Foxx to any second division club, possibly the White Sox, which will pay Connie's price of between $75,000 and $125,000. Except for several important cogs, such as the two Dean brothers, Rickey has announced he is ready to trade and sell most of the former world's champions.

Outfielder Al Simmons, who infuriated his bosses by ripping a 1936 contract that offered him $12,500 instead of last year's $25,000, also is slated to move, probably to Detroit. A hitch has developed in the deal whereby Outfileder Gerald Walker, a pitcher, and cash would be given by the Tigers for the White Sox star. Rogers Hornsby, pilot of the St. Louis Browns and probably the slickest trader at the market, turned down a flat offer of Simmons for Outfielder Sam West, but is considering a roundabout dicker which would send West to the White Sox if the Tiger deal is made.

The Giants, who traded Pitcher Roy Parmelee to the Cardinals for Second Baseman Burgess Whitehead during the Dayton meeting, are hot after First Baseman Johnny Mize and Pepper Martin. The New York Yankees, Boston Red Sox and Washington also are trying to swing a big three-cornered deal with Outfielder Roy Johnson, of the Red Sox, the central figure.

Indians Seek Catcher.

Cleveland is still after a first-rank catcher, the Chicago Cubs admit they will swap any outfielder except Augie Galan and Frank Demaree for a starting pitcher, and so it goes with all the other clubs.

The St. Louis syndicate, headed by George Sisler, may close its deal for the purchase of the St. Louis Browns from the Phil Ball estate, but everything concerning the fate of the Boston Braves is pure conjecture. At Dayton, President Ford Frick revealed that an offer, which he feared was "too good to be true" had been made for the Braves, but it fell through and the team was taken over by the league.

Night baseball, successful last season at Cincinnati, will come up for discussion at the meetings of the club owners. Many owners were enthusiastic about night games until they attended the minor league meeting at Dayton. There, they heard both good and bad reports. Now, they aren't so sure whether it would be a smart move.

G. W. and C. U. Open Seasons Tomorrow

To Oppose Shenandoah and Maryland Normal on Own Courts.

COLLEGIATE basketball returns to Washington tomorrow night with Catholic University and George Washington's dribblers ushering in the new year with games on their home courts. The Cardinals are scheduled to entertain Maryland State Normal at Brookland, while the Colonials encounter Shenandoah on the H street court.

Neither visiting quintet is expected to give the home teams serious competition, but both games will be of major interest inasmuch as they will provide the fans with their first close-up of the new playing rules.

Catholic's starting line-up will have Capt. Bernie Lieb, all-District selection, at center; Hermie Schmarr, the District's high-scoring ace and another all-District nominee, and Zeke Brown, at forwards; "Irish" Carroll, the Cardinals' football star and Sam Pagano, at guards.

First Appearance.

George Washington's starting five will not be announced until game time but it is certain to embrace Hal Kiesel, the lanky center; "Tuffy" Leemans, Milt Schonfeld, half-pint guard; "Moe" Berg, and Ben Goldfadden. This will be the team's first appearance under the direction of its new coach, Bill Reinhart.

Starting time for both games is 8 o'clock.

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

AN examination of the secret archives of Around the Ring's private information headquarters confirms a belief that has been almost a conviction with this department for some time—namely, to wit, that Clark Griffith is the only man who has made any money in the boxfighting racket here.

Not that making money from the beak-biffing business is any sin. On the contrary, in this day and age it is quite a tribute to one's sagacity, acumen and financial genius.

Percentage Off the Top.

Mr. Griffith's profits have been accomplished through his most effective medium—the process of taking an exorbitant percentage off the top, with absolutely no risk, financial or otherwise, to himself, for the rental of his Georgia avenue ballyard.

In times none too prosperous, Mr. Griffith has exacted a flat rate of 15 per cent of the gross gate receipts of a sport in its very infancy—a sport that needed to be nursed along through its first puny days until it had become a lusty, vigorous youngster.

Taking 15 per cent off the top of wrestling receipts seems absolutely all right from this viewpoint. Wrestling is a well-established business—a business conducted with about half the overhead connected with boxing. So with football, in which none of the contestants are paid cash moneys (at least not percentages of the gate receipts).

Neither wrestling, football nor any of the other sports which, through rentals on the Georgia avenue apple orchard, help pay the freight on Mr. Griffith's none-too-successful baseball team, are faced with the 5 per cent tax which boxing is forced to pay to the very worthy commission which governs it.

Drew $37,860.79 Gross.

In 1934, the first year boxing was legalized here, fisticuffing events at Griffith Stadium (with the exception of the Police Benefit Card, for which the ball park was donated), drew a gross of $37,860.79.

In 1935, boxing at Griffith Stadium drew a gross of $58,617.47 (not counting the Police benefit). All of which makes a total of $96,478.26. Griffith's 15 per cent of this sum amounted to exactly $14,471.73 unless both our arithmetic fails us and the adding machine upon which we calculated these figures fail us.

Now $14,471.73 is not a stupendous sum of money, but it is more than anyone else has made from legalized boxing here. That sum represents absolutely clear profit too, Mr. Griffith always taking the precaution of saddling all operating expenses upon the person operating boxfighting contests in his ball yard.

And that $14,471.73 does not represent Mr. Griffith's profits from boxing by any means. The Old Fox has full control of all concessions at his stadium, and in many instances these concessions pay more profit than his 15 per cent. Mr. C. Egbert Cornell, the restaurateur who for a spell operated the Twin City Arena hereabouts, went along week after week in that enterprise just breaking even in gate receipts—indeed, sometimes losing on them—but winding up with a profit through his concessions. Which will just give you an idea.

To the best of our knowledge, there is no other outdoor site in the country where more than 12 per cent is exacted for rental. Mike Jacobs, impresario of the Twentieth Century Club in New York, pays only 12 per cent, but then Mike seems to be smarter than our local crop—he's got Joe Louis, hasn't he?

It is our contention that if Mr. Griffith would reduce his cut to, say, 10 per cent, it would give our promoters a bigger margin to bargain with in attempting to sign outstanding bouts. It is almost impossible to sign a really good contest for less than 50 or 55 per cent of the gross, and the payment of such sums is impossible as long as the exorbitant rental is exacted. Joe Turner and Goldie Ahearn were very fortunate indeed to sign Canzoneri and Klick for 50 per cent of the gross—and they didn't make money on that fight, despite a gate of $24,502.

$300,000 Fortune Dissipated, Leaping Lena Charity Patient

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—The primrose trail of boxing is strewn with pathos and tragedy, but one of the saddest of them all is the story of "Leaping" Lena Levy.

They called her "Leaping Lena" when she leaped into renown by casting aside the boresome duties of a housewife to manage her picturesque brother, King Levinsky, right up to the very door of the heavyweight boxing throne. But the curtain has come at last to the colorful figure.

Tonight "Leaping Lena" is a charity patient in the psychopathic ward of the county hospital, sent there by relatives, after they were no longer able to keep her in a private institution. Night life, and money, were too much for her. She had been a patient in a private institution for four months. She was taken there a few days after the Kingfish fought Joe Louis, the Detroit bomber, in the White Sox ball park, August 7.

A chunky woman, the mother of two grown boys, "Leaping Lena" assumed the management of her brother five years ago, and their enterprise earned about $300,000. Yet today she and her brother are virtually broke. The fortune was wasted on automobiles, expensive clothing, luxurious living and bad business ventures. At the height of her career, "Leaping Lena" opened a restaurant, at Halsted and Maxwell street in the heart of Chicago's ghetto, and this cost them a loss of $35,000.

Mrs. Levy is about 42 years old and a divorcee. A hard worker all her life, she developed shrewdness in her association with promoters and managers, gaining the reputation of holding out for better terms whenever the services of her brother were sought. In one year she collected $90,000 for the Kingfish's battles in the Chicago stadium. He fought them all and never was knocked out until he enraged Max Baer, then the world's champion, who flattened him in two rounds of their scheduled four-round exhibition in Chicago a year ago. Previously he had fought Baer twice, once for 20 rounds and the second time for ten. He lost the decision both times.

"Leaping Lena" usually occupied a ringside seat when her brother fought, and screamed advice at the Kingfish during the rounds.

"Kill him, King; knock that big bum out," were some of her favorite warwhoops. She screamed at the top of her voice. She never thought her brother lost. She was immensely proud of him and always thought he won, no matter what the judges and referee thought.

"We were robbed," was her usual cry.

Physicians say she may recover, but it will be a long, hard pull.

Harrison Eyes 3d Straight Pin Title

Rolls 375 Set to Take Lead With Average of 123-13.

ASSUMING the lead after seven weeks of steady rolling, Joe Harrison, for two years the champion of the District League, again appears to be headed for his third title.

Pounding out a 375 set, the Occidental Restaurant star slipped into the lead with an average of 123-13 for 21 games which brought to an end the three-week battle with his brother Paul. The Arcadian turned in a low 330 total after setting the pace for over a month.

An Occidental teammate and the No. 1 ranking shooter of the Capital, Astor Clarke, promises trouble ahead. Clipping off a lusty 404 set to lead Occidental to its third-game sweep over Convention Hall, Clarke jumped his average to 123-2.

A half dozen or more of the major circuits' sharpshooters boosted their marks as a result of some heavy firing.

Bill Clampitt, the Heurich howitzer, who turned in the season's record set of 453, skied his average four points to 122-49 which gives him a tie with Bill Krauss for fourth place, several pins back of Ed Blakeney, the Brewers' captain.

Three of the Grand Central Valet shooters showed big increases when they played leading roles in a record team set of 1,909, Joe Freschi, the Dixie sweepstakes champion, cleaned off 417 maples; Johnny Anderson, the dynamic anchor shooter, hit for 407 and Lou Pantos clouted for 397. All three are well above the 121 mark as a result of the heavy scoring.

sulted from a Western Maryland fumble that Johnny Gormley recovered on the enemy's 23. He helped Guckeyson and Ellinger move the ball to the 1-yard line for a first down, and one chance was all Ellinger needed to push it over.

Western Maryland took the kickoff on its own 34-yard line, and on the first play tried to pass. It was another long one out in the flat zone, but the man it was intended for never saw it for the fleeing figure of Bill Guckeyson, moving in full flight, cut in ahead of him, seized the ball and sped down the sidelines, back toward center for a touchdown.

The Terrors were battling valiantly at the finish, but it was now a battle not to win, but to prevent the victory-crazed Old Liners from making a complete rout of the day.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 7.—Headed by 16 of the Nation's 20 top-ranking girl rollers, the elite of Uncle Sam's women duckpinists, will gather at the Recreation Center here tomorrow to battle for gold and glory in the third running of the annual Chesapeake Sweepstake.

Five games will be rolled in the afternoon, five more at night, and the girl who piles up the highest ten-game score will ride home in state with the championship, $100 in cash and permanent possession of the Mayor Howard W. Jackson trophy.

The three girls to be most closely watched are Ida Simmons, of Norfolk, Va.; Lorraine Gulli, of Washington, and Naomi Zimmerman, of Baltimore. They are first, second and fifth in the national rankings, each an artist at spilling pins.

27 From Washington.

Sixty-one rollers—27 from Washington, 20 from Baltimore, 10 from Norfolk, 2 from Richmond and 2 from Hartford—have notified officials they plan to compete tomorrow. Allowing for the usual quota of defaults, the starting field likely will number around 50.

Occidental Adds To League Lead

The Occidental Restaurant bowling team strengthened its lead in the Southern Inter-City Duckpin League last night by taking four out of five games from the John Marshall team of Richmond. The visitors salvaged some of the glory by ending an 18-game winning streak of the Capital team by taking the set game of the set, 599 to 593. Astor Clarke, with 661, and Dutch Newman, with 650, led the attack for the Occidentals, while Crowder, Ingle and Dobson did the best work for John Marshall.

Richmond bowlers also lost in the match at the Temple Alleys, the Coca Cola Cavaliers bowing to the Temple Dixie Pig team in three of the five games. Wolfe and Pacini had sets of 621 and 612, respectively.

Raymond at Sherwood "A."
Park View at McMillan.
Sherwood "B" at Virginia Avenue.
Burroughs at Rosedale.

SCORING early in the game, Rosedale turned in the surprise of the season yesterday by defeating the league-leading Park-View eleven, 3-0, at Burroughs Playground. Sherwood "B" had no trouble with Georgetown nor Virginia Avenue with Burroughs.

Taking advantage of the wind in the first half, Rosedale played confidently and worried the Park View defense unceasingly, McBain's opening goal coming after ten minutes playing from a cross by Myers. Lombardy effectively shadowed Royal, Park View's leading shot, and the other Park View forwards found it difficult to circumvent Stasulli and Stockwell, with the result that the Rosedale goalkeeper had little to do. There was no further scoring in the initial period.

After a brief attack on Rosedale's goal which was cleared by Lombardy, the Rosedale forwards combined nicely and Botts centered across to McBain who scored the second goal soon after resumption. Park View was aggressor for a short time but lacked accuracy. Rosedale getting many goal-kicks through the poor shooting of Mahaney, Stoneburner and Royal. Midway through the half, Rosedale was granted a penalty-kick and McBain added to his and his team's total, giving Rosedale a substantial lead which was never threatened thereafter.

Calls Notre Dame The Most Inspired Team of Season

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—This is in a way a strange and uncomfortable Saturday. For the first time in two months I am not sitting in a press box, a telegraph operator by my side, preparing to look at a major college football game. It is restful and not an unpleasant change, and yet one can not let down that quickly, and I feel I ought to be lugging my typewriter and field glasses to some railroad station, there to board a special train loaded with gay young people, good looking girls wearing colored ribbons and feathers, and traveling to some stadium or other, climbing to the press box, and there await that electric moment when the two teams are finally lined up on the field, one to kick, the other to receive, and the first whistle sets the two sets of players into action.

In retrospect, it has been one of the best football seasons I have ever known, and unsurpassed in thrills. I saw ten games. They were Purdue-Northwestern, Temple-Vanderbilt, Yale-Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh-Notre Dame, Yale-Army, Fordham-St. Mary's, Notre Dame-Ohio State, Army-Notre Dame, Princeton-Dartmouth and Southern Methodist-Texas Christian. Included in these was the most thrilling game I ever saw, the Notre Dame-Ohio State contest, and also the next best game, Methodist and Texas Christian.

Any season in which you can see five such heart-stoppers as the Ohio State game, Notre Dame against Pitt, Yale's great rally against Pennsylvania, Notre Dame's tie with Army, and the great game for the football championship of the Southwest, is an outstanding season. I know that I have never been through one like it before. I saw enough spirit, courage and will-to-win to inspire me for a lifetime.

ONE thing I know, there is nothing wrong with the present generation of youngsters, no softening up, no slacking, no dimming of the flame of courage and ambition. If the politicians will just leave the country alone until these kids can get their hands on it, I have an idea that we'll be all right.

In retrospect: The prettiest spectacle I saw all year was the between halves show staged by the Purdue and Northwestern bands at Evanston, Ill. This was a night game I attended during the World Series in Chicago, and the boys did some grand things with lights on the darkened field far below where I sat. The tackiest and least inspiring band I looked at all year is still the property of Yale University. It has no showmanship whatsoever and is badly uniformed.

The dullest football game I saw all year was the Fordham-St. Mary's tie. It seemed to be an hour of football between two teams that couldn't go anywhere, or which, when they did, couldn't make it stick. The best game, of course, was the one involving Notre Dame and Ohio State, and the last two minutes of that will be tops I guess as long as I am looking at football.

I WOULD not rate Notre Dame as the best, but I certainly would call it the most spirited and inspired team I have seen all year. Yale's late victory over Penn, after being 20 points behind, was no mean achievement, but Yale didn't have the strength and the power to sustain its spirit all year.

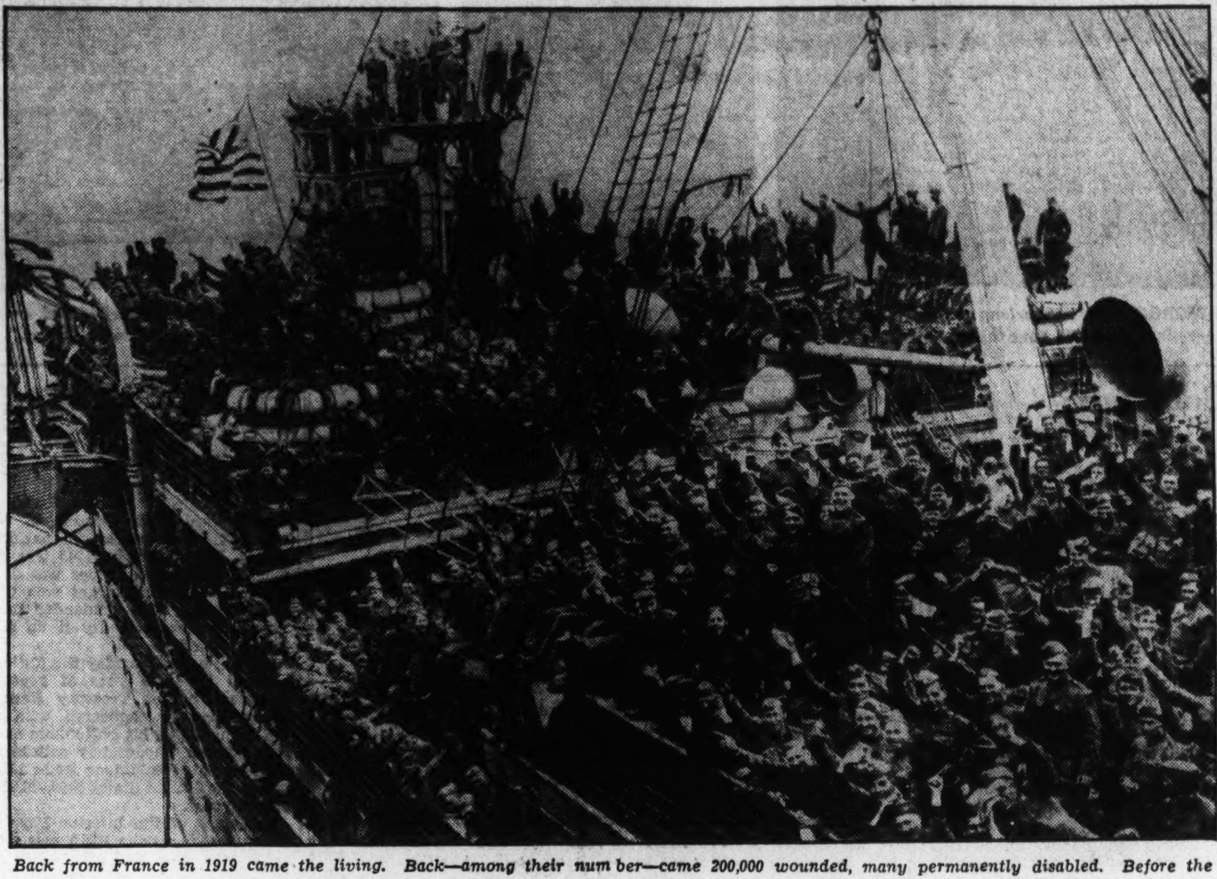
America Speaks: Pay Cash Bonus, Say 55% in Weekly Poll

Americans advancing across this death-flecked clearing in the Argonne were part of more than four million who served in the armed forces of the United States. Two million reached France. Fewer than a million and a half reached "the front."



Back from France in 1919 came the living. Back—among their num ber—came 200,000 wounded, many permanently disabled. Before the armistice was an hour old a bonus bill had been submitted to Congress.

On this French hill—drawn up in cross-marked rows overlooking Paris—lie some of the 50,000 American soldiers who died as the result of battle. An almost equal number died of disease, either in camps here or in France.

Every Section Favors Immediate Payment

But Margin Almost Disappears in New England Area Returns; Gallup Says Relief Group Ballots Turn Test Vote Tide.

By Dr. George Gallup.

Managing Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Dec. 7.—The first Nation-wide referendum conducted in a decade on the subject of the soldiers' bonus finds the people of this country virtually deadlocked. As in a tug-of-war on a policemen's field day, almost equal numbers of voters line up on each side of the question of immediate cash payment of the adjusted service certificates, which normally fall due in 1945.

In this national tug-of-war 55 in every 100 Americans seize one end of the rope and pull for immediate cash payment of the bonus, cheered on by the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The other 45 in every 100, rallied by conservative business men anxious to promote national economy, seize the opposite end of the rope to pull against cash payment. As of today, with bonus legislation almost certain to receive early action in Congress next month, public opinion from coast to coast divides on the bonus issue as follows:

"Pay the bonus now," say 55 per cent.

"Do not pay it," say 45 per cent.

The slight edge in favor of immediate payment is brought about largely by the vote of persons now receiving relief money, who plump for cash payment of the bonus by an overwhelming majority of 8 to 2. If this group were not included, public opinion on the bonus question would divide almost 50-50.

Sentiment for or against the veterans' cause shifts quickly according to the changing fiscal moods of the American people. Only a year and a half ago, in March, 1934, a large majority of citizens (69 per cent) were against any increase in the sums of money being paid to veterans, as shown by a poll conducted at the time by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

But as the Federal Government continued to pay out billions of dollars for relief and other purposes, sentiment in favor of slicing the bonus melon grew accordingly. Today the typical attitude of those in favor of immediate cash payment is, "Plenty of money goes to other persons; why shouldn't the veterans get theirs?"

Scientific Sampling Insures Accuracy.

These facts are revealed in the answers to a Nation-wide poll in which ballots were distributed by mail and by personal interviewers to a cross-section of the entire voting population of the country.

Had all of the 40,000,000 persons who cast their ballots in the last Presidental election voted on this issue, the results would probably differ by less than 1 per cent from the figures given in this article.

This high degree of accuracy is obtained through the process of what statisticians call "fair sampling." All groups in the voting population are reached in the proportion in which they exist—Democrats and Republicans, standpatters and shifters, rural and urban dwellers, young and old, persons on relief as well as those in all other economic levels.

To obtain an accurate cross-section of the voters of the country it is necessary to reach people in every State in the right proportion—rural folk who live miles back from the road in Wyoming, in Kentucky, in Arizona as well as city dwellers who live in the shadow of skyscrapers in Chicago, or San Francisco, or in the populous stone canyons of New York City.

If number of ballots were more important than the accuracy of the cross-section, the American Institute of Public Opinion would have no difficulty in getting hundreds of thousands of votes through the simple process of including a ballot in the 54 newspapers which subscribe to these weekly polls and print the results. The total circulation of these papers is more than 6,000,000, which means that, counting additional readership, they probably reach more than 12,000,000 voters. Radio broadcasts could be used to obtain many additional thousands of votes. But such procedure, while bringing a deluge of ballots, would not result in an accurate cross-section, which is the more important factor in assuring reliable results in a poll of this character.

The Democratic Party is in favor of immediate cash payment of the bonus, the poll shows, despite the fact that President Roosevelt vetoed the Patman bonus bill last spring in decisive and outspoken language. Republicans, on the other hand, are against immediate payment, but the majority is slight.

"Do you favor immediate cash payment of the soldiers' bonus?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	59%	41%
Republicans	49%	51%

All Sections Favor Payment.

The geographical section least in favor of immediate cash payment of the bonus is New England, where the National Weekly Poll has shown the Republican Party to be strongest today. The sections most in favor of paying the bonus are the South and the Mountain States—shown in recent polls to be the two most loyally Democratic areas in the country. The sectional vote on immediate cash payment of the bonus follows:

	Yes	No
New England	50.5%	49.5%
Middle Atlantic....	56	44
East Central	56	44
West Central	53	47
South	57	43
Mountain	57	43
Pacific Coast	52	48

When opinion on a vital issue is sharply and evenly divided, the American people traditionally seek compromise. That this is true of the bonus issue is revealed by a contrast between two polls taken by the American Institute of Public Opinion last January and February.

In the first poll the voters were asked simply whether they favored immediate cash payment. The score was "Yes" by a vote of 52 to 48. But in the second poll the voters were asked not merely whether or not they wanted the bonus paid in full now, but also whether they favored a compromise calling for payment in part to needy veterans only. Here is the exact wording of this question, together with the answers:

What is your opinion regarding the soldiers' bonus? Should the bonus be paid:

In full now to all veterans....	30%
Only when due in 1945........	22%
In part now to needy veterans only	48%

Note that nearly half of the voters—48%—were in favor of paying the bonus to needy veterans only. Note also that when this alternative was offered on the ballot, the number of voters who favored immediate payment in full sank to fewer than one-third, against 52 per cent when the question was worded without that alternative one month earlier. The number who felt it should not be paid until due sank to about one-fifth, against 48 per cent on the previous ballot.

"It's Not a Bonus; It's a Salary."

At the present time the total number of bonus certificates in force is approximately 3,500,000, with a maturity value of $3,500,000,000. Loans of about $1,700,000,000 have been made by the Government on these certificates. Immediate cash payment of the bonus in full would therefore call for approximately $1,800,000,000—the difference between the maturity value of the certificates and the amount of the loans, which could be canceled.

In face-to-face interviews with special investigators employed by the American Institute of Public Opinion voters give reasons for their "yes" or "no" vote on the soldiers' bonus.

A housewife in Memphis put it this way: "If there's enough money for bums, there's enough money for our soldiers."

Down in Miami a man in the investment business said: "The soldiers are certainly more deserving than most of those now receiving the dole, and this money would be better spent on the bonus than in continuing idiotic experiments."

A high school teacher in Atlanta voted "yes" and then said, "I hope it will cost us enough to teach us to attend to our own business the next time we have a chance to go to war."

"What's a few million more?" inquired a Nebraskan who owns several farms.

A jeweler in Sioux City said: "It is an obligation that has been due since 1918, and it would put money into circulation."

The owner of a dairy in Chicago put it this way: "Let them get some dough; everyone else gets it."

An Indianapolis laborer said: "While other men were in the United States making $10 a day the soldier was getting $1. I feel he has protected us, and we should render a service to him."

A woman on relief in Indianapolis pointed this out: "There are many soldiers on relief who would be taken care of this way."

"Pay it and get it over with," said a Buffalo barber.

Issue to Flare Anew As Congress Meets

Veterans Cite Low War Pay of Soldiers, Advocate Payment on Grounds It Would Help Prime the Pump of Business.

The proprietor of a small drug store in Plainfield, N. J., said: "It's not a bonus; it's a salary. And it's owed to them."

"It'd Be a Curse To My Two Sons."

"If I got the bonus, I couldn't get the dole," said the superintendent of a PWA construction gang in New York City.

A Negro laborer in Buffalo said: "Most of them fought because they were made to, anyway."

A woman on relief in Cleveland said: "I don't feel they will use it to the very best advantage. It would be used more or less for drink, gambling and women."

A metal polisher in Chicago said: "Soldiers who need relief can get it without the bonus."

A woman who probably should not be more clearly identified said: "I don't believe soldiers should be considered a separate class. During the war we all did our part. There is no reason in the world why a big lawyer I know, who is drawing $150 a month right now for total disability, should ever get a penny more. He makes a very good living, and I can't see there is anything wrong with him."

A man on relief in Portland, Oreg., said: "It's not due. I have two sons who want it; but, by jingoes, I think it'd be a curse to 'em if they got it."

A Los Angeles insurance salesman said: "It would not be six months before they would want more."

Bonus Bills Begin Hour After Armistice.

When President Roosevelt vetoed the Patman "greenback" bonus bill last May, he temporarily halted a movement which began the very day the war ended. A bonus bill was introduced in Congress within one hour after the armistice was signed.

At that time the Nation felt that something should be done to help the soldiers find their way back to civil life. A rider was attached to the internal revenue act of 1919, providing a discharge allowance of $60 for each soldier as he left service. That was the first bonus law.

It merely started the agitation. Soldiers discharged from service found it difficult to get work; some were bitter against those who had stayed home to earn $10 or $15 a day in shipyards and factories. Soon petitions for relief poured into Washington, and within a year nearly 100 bonus bills were introduced in Congress. Veterans put forward the theory, upon which the present bonus is based, that "adjustment" should be made to the former soldiers for the low pay they received in the Army as compared to the higher wages of civilians who stayed behind.

Veterans Get Paid-Up Endowment Policies.

At first, pressure was brought upon the State legislatures. Many States enacted special bonuses for former service men within their borders. Between 1917 and 1930 a total of $500,000,000 was distributed among World War veterans by their own States. But veterans and their leaders were not satisfied with State aid alone, and pressure for a national bonus was renewed in Congress.

In 1921 a bonus bill was passed by the House but killed in the Senate after President Harding had appeared in person before that body to urge "delay" in this type of legislation in order to prevent "disaster of the Nation's finances" in the post-war depression.

The following year President Harding declared he would approve a bonus bill if taxes were levied to pay the cost. A sales tax was suggested. But when a bill was passed in Congress without the revenue provisions, he vetoed it.

The final bonus bill, known as the World War adjustment compensation act, was passed in 1924 over the veto of President Coolidge, who declared, "We owe no bonus to able-bodied veterans." The purpose of this act was to give the veterans paid-up 20-year endowment policies which, falling due in 1945, would provide security for their old age and protection for dependents in the meantime. Each veteran below the rank of major in the Army and lieutenant commander in the Navy was offered a service credit of $1 a day for home service and $1.25 for duty overseas. In order to compensate for deferred payment, the sum was arbitrarily boosted 25 per cent. The whole amount, kept at 4 per cent compounded interest, was to reach maturity in 20 years, and neither Congress nor the veterans who helped write the law intended that the certificates should be paid before then.

During the Coolidge boom of 1925-29 the bonus issue was quiescent, as former soldiers enjoyed their share of "good times." But when depression came, the movement for immediate cash payment began. It snow-balled so rapidly that by 1931 Congress was stampeded into passing a law allowing veterans to borrow up to 50 per cent of the maturity value of their certificates. This law was vetoed by President Hoover, but Congress enacted it over his veto.

Roosevelt Vetoes "Greenback" Bonus.

The bonus issue was again spotlighted the following year when a ragged bonus army of 20,000 men and women invaded Washington demanding immediate payment in full of the soldiers' bonus. Before they were removed by the Regular Army with tear gas and bayonets, a bonus bill providing for immediate payment by means of printing press money was introduced in Congress by Representative Patman and was passed by the house with a 5 to 4 vote. But the Senate turned it down.

Reintroduced in almost the same form in the last session of Congress, the bill was vetoed by President Roosevelt, who left little doubt in his veto message that he would not approve any other bill for cash payment of the bonus before 1945, particularly one which embraced inflationary measures.

Four Presidents Vetoed Demand

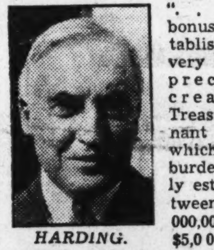
Harding—



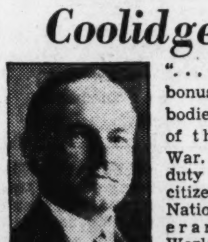
HARDING.

". . . It (the bonus bill) establishes the very dangerous precedent of creating a Treasury covenant to pay which puts a burden, variously estimated between $4,000,000,000 and $5,000,000,000 upon the American people, not to discharge an obligation—which the Government always must pay—but to bestow a bonus which the soldiers themselves, while serving in the World War, did not expect . . .

". . . nations can only survive where taxation is restrained from the limits of oppression, and where the public treasury is locked against class legislation . . ."

1924

Coolidge—



COOLIDGE.

". . . We owe no bonus to able-bodied veterans of the World War. The first duty of every citizen is to the Nation. The veterans of the World War performed this first duty. To confer upon them a cash consideration, or its equivalent, for performing this first duty is unjustified. It is not justified when considered in the interest of the whole people; it is not justified when considered alone on its own merits . . .

". . . Patriotism which is paid for is not patriotism . . ."

With President Roosevelt's veto of the Patman "inflationary" bonus bill fresh in mind, the American Legion met in national convention last September and considered measures to be submitted to the next session of Congress. They seek payment of approximately 3,500,000 adjusted service certificates now in force.

Hoover—

". . . There are veterans unemployed and in common with many others of our people. These, like the others, are being provided the basic necessities of life by the devoted committees in those parts affected by the depression or the drought . . .

"The breach of fundamental principle in the proposal [the act to increase the loan basis of adjusted service certificates] is the requirement of the Federal Government to provide an enormous sum of money to a vast majority who are able to care for themselves and who are caring for themselves . . ."

ROOSEVELT.

". . . The bill before me provides for the immediate payment of the 1945 value of the certificates. It means paying $1,600,000,000 more than the present value of the certificates . . . It is a new, straight gratuity or bounty to the amount of $1,600,000,000 . . .

". . . Today the credit of the United States is safe. But it cannot ultimately be safe if we engage in a policy of yielding to each and all of the groups that are able to enforce upon the Congress claims for special consideration. Next Week

For eight successive Sundays the National Weekly Poll of Public Opinion has reported what America thinks about different issues of the day: Government spending for relief, President Roosevelt's standing with the voters, the Supreme Court, the G. O. P. candidates and others.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC OPINION

Next Sunday the Weekly Poll reports how Americans answer the question:

"What is the most vital issue before the American people today?"

Is it jobs? Is it peace? Is it "economy"? Is it religion? Is it taxes? Or what?

The country's answers will be published exclusively in Washington by THE WASHINGTON POST, and by more than 50 other newspapers from Coast to Coast.

". . . There seems to be an opinion widely prevalent that the amount shown on the face of the adjusted service certificate — as being due in 20 years from the date of issuance—represents the adjusted service credit of $1 and $1.25 a day. In fact, that figure spoken of as the amount of the adjusted service certificate really represents the 'maturity value' of a 20-year endowment life insurance policy. . . . The 'maturity value' stated on the face of the certificate in the average case represents approximately two and one-half times the adjusted service credit computed on the basis of $1 and $1.25 a day."

Immediate cash payment of the bonus became an acute issue in 1932 when the "bonus army" entered Washington and encamped near the Capitol "until 1945 if necessary."

Serious trouble ensued The demands of the bonus marchers were refused and police and finally regular troops were called out before the army of veterans were evacuated.

The News of the Week Passes in Brief Review

National Affairs

F. D. R.

Bankers Are Unnamed!

News from the Little White House during the week was unusually dull. The Pine Mountain Camp at Warm Springs, Ga., was the scene of much relaxation, as the President had slipped from under the load of his office, having disposed of all the essential preliminary work on the budget for Congress' January session and having made his Atlanta speech.

Much of the dispatch-matter was concerned with the identities of the New York bankers who, the President said, told him in the spring of 1933 that the national debt could safely go to 55 to 70 billions of dollars. A very large doubt loomed in the minds of certain gentlemen, such as Henry P. Fletcher, Republican national committee chairman, and Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, that there were any such bankers, and both called loudly on the President to name any such men, "if any." At his semiweekly press conference the President on direct questioning admitted he had documentary evidence in the shape of letters from these men but naturally refused to give names.

Much of the week's speculation hung around the possibilities in the next session of Congress, with Mr. Roosevelt's ideas about the soldiers' bonus, the works-relief program and the Townsend plan the object of the majority of brooding done. Although his aim, outlined during the week, of a short session, in which appropriations will be brutally cut down, will form the preliminary plan, the actions of the Supreme Court on the AAA, the Tennessee Valley experiment, the cotton control program, PWA housing and the utility act may be the decisive factor in the session's length. There is much legislation left over from last session also.

He inspected the Pine Mountain Valley organized rural community, hailing it as a "dream come true"; was quoted by a delegation of Georgia farmers as favoring interest rates as low as 3½ per cent on farm mortgages; began work on speeches for tomorrow in Chicago at the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation and one at South Bend, Ind., the same day, where he will be awarded an honorary degree of doctor of laws at Notre Dame University.

Justice

Has Many Warm Friends

The nine elderly gentlemen of the United States Supreme Court didn't know how many friends they had.

Hy-Grade Food Products Corporation is their friend. It said so—as did National Biscuit Co., P. Lorillard Co., tobaccor manufacturers, and the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers—when they all rushed in oozing high-priced advice by the hundred pages as to how the court should decide the case of Hoosac Mills vs. the wheat production control tax. On the other hand the court developed sudden warm friends in the American Farm Bureau Federation and the League for Economic Equality. These rural friends advised in the opposite direction from the city friends.

So with the benefit of numerous volunteer briefs, the court tomorrow will hear argument on the Hoosac Mills case, crucial test of the New Deal farm program. Sifting the arguments on both sides, commentators say the issue to be determined is this:

> Has the Federal Government the constitutional right to tax manufacturers in order to pay farmers to plant moderately to the end that the country as a whole may benefit by a balanced economy?

Headlines last week flared epithets one way and then the other, but the result will be determined by delicate interpretation of such familiar and ill-understood phrases as "general welfare," "due process of law," and "interstate commerce." No decision is expected until next January or February.

Whether just whistling to keep up its courage, or, as some editors feared, scheming to keep the AAA program in operation despite a possible adverse decision, the AAA last week announced it would offer cotton growers new four-year contracts early in 1936. The same contracts were in the offing for wheat and tobacco growers.

Meanwhile Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace said in Chicago that the AAA production control program was permanent, and listed eight alternative plans he had up his sleeve if the courts junk the present one.

Utilities

Real Battles Loom

The hullabaloo over what many people still believe is a pretty mild regulatory act, the holding company bill, really struck its homestretch stride in the first part of the week, when the December 1 deadline for utilities to register under SEC came and went swiftly.

In an effort to same time and expense in a multiplicity of suits, about 50 of which are threatening, the Government asked the District Supreme Court to delay action on injunctions sought by 7 holding companies pending its decision on the Electric Bond & Share case.

Fifty-eight companies registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission. More than 300 had asked exemption as intra-State concerns or as companies in other industries whose utility activities are only incidental in their total operations.

The line-up was almost solidly against the Government, for even many of those who registered did so with accompanying protests. Attorney General Cummings and SEC officials assured the companies repeatedly that those who registered would not suffer an impaired legal standing if they wished to contest the act later. Nevertheless the utilities men, bitter with the long fight, chose not to heed.

Arthur Krock, of the New York Times, recalling the origins of the battle between Mr. Roosevelt and the utilities, wrote last week about the occasion when the utilities executives dangled a sort of combination olive-branch and fishbait in front of the President in the form of an itemized list of three billion dollars in industrial projects which the utility industry was willing to expend if the proposed Congressional law, then only in the early stages, would stop at regulation—without any sort of death sentence wiping out eventually the higher bracket companies.

In the lagging heavy industries—in the "slowly convalescing capital market," said Mr. Krock, three billions was a huge stake in recovery. "No man in the country wanted more to see this golden tide released than the President. But he would not yield to compromise . . . This finally convinced the utilities leaders that no inducement—no bait, legitimate or otherwise—could swerve the President . . ."

RFC

Railroad Problem Solved?

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation last week gave reporters the most massive "handout," or news release, within the memory of man. It included 2,414 mimeographed pages in five volumes and weighed 30 pounds.

Its contents were just about as heavy. The most comprehensive report ever made by a Government agency on an industrial concern, it was an utterly complete analysis of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. Its purpose was to suggest merging this line with the St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad and the Missouri-Kansas and Texas Road. Getting this into a single headline was the journalistic feat of the week: RFC Favors "MOP," Frisco, "Katy" Merger, is the way the New York Herald Tribune put it.

MOP, controlled by Van Sweringen interests, owes the RFC $23,134,800, and the report says the specter of poverty has not been a stranger to the line.

"The RFC looks to consolidations for solution of the railroad problem," editorial writers bugled.

Houses

New Ones for New York

In New York last week 2,000 people shivered at the official housewarming for New Houses. That is the name of the first low-rent housing project (a $600,000 matter), built with Federal aid, and with relief labor at the corner of Avenue C and Third street, just off the Bowery.

Every room has a window, every apartment a bath. There are playrooms, ice boxes, modern kitchens and all is fire-proof. Rents are $6.05 a month per room.

"I hope the day is dawning when capital will devote itself to better and cheaper housing, but we know that the Government will have to continue to build for the low-income groups," said Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt at the dedication.

Three days later Senator Robert Wagner, of New York, sponsor in the upper house for most of Roosevelt's social bills, announced he would push a measure next session for $800,000,000 to launch a long-range slum clearance and housing program divorced from emergency programs.

Col. Knox

Suggests Paying Bonus

There was hot stuff on the political platter last week with a sizzling argument between Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, and Henry H. Curran, director of the National Economy League, as the piece de resistance.

It seems that Col. Knox accepted an invitation to speak at a dinner of the league on January 15 at the Waldorf-Astoria. Then, however, he made known his stand for immediate prepayment of the soldiers' bonus, not due till 1945. This thought, anathema of the utmost intensity to Economy Leaguers, brought an immediate inquiry from Mr. Curran, asking for the colonel's definite views on the bonus.

Col. Knox took the stand that he has always been opposed to prepayment of the bonus, but believes that since the present Administration "began its policy of priming the business pump by putting money in circulation through Government expenditures," several millions should be taken from the $4,800,000,000 work-relief fund and paid out to soldiers. He said that this would "subtract $2,000,000,000 from the funds which Postmaster General James Farley is going to use to try to maintain the present Administration in office." He intimated a Republican administration should stick to rigid economy, however, thus leaving himself an "out."

Mr. Curran, denying that immediate payment of the bonus would not cost more, pointed out that payment ten years in advance would cost $700,000,000 more of "permanent waste," since the $2,300,000,000 required to pay it now would be but $1,600,000,000 in 1945 due to interest costs. He charged directly that Col. Knox was playing politics in the matter, and bent his bow deep for the following paragraph:

"It is my belief that if the Republicans do any artful dodging of this kind on the bonus, with a lively eye to the vote of a few hundred thousand veterans, there will be no Republican administration for the veterans to lie down with like lion and lamb."

During the week the Liberty League branded the AAA as a menace to freedom in this country and as a vicious union of Fascism, Socialism and Communism. Dr. Francis Everett Townsend predicted revolution in the United States if his plan is not adopted. Illinois backers of Senator William E. Borah prepared plans to enter the Idaho statesman's name in the Illinois primaries April 14. The Republican State committee of Ohio unanimously opined that Herbert Hoover should not be a candidate for renomination next year.

Then Secretary of the Interior Harold S. Ickes capped the week's minor wrestling with a dictionary of discontent, which he termed "a lexicon of shibboleths freely indulged in by people fighting the Roosevelt Administration." One of them:

"Liberty League—A term of unconscious humor applied to itself by a group of multimillionaires and their worshipful hangers-on who indignantly insist that the Federal Constitution is an instrument written by Alexander Hamilton for the exclusive protection of large aggregations of property, howsoever acquired."

Industry

Lambasts New Deal

The annual convention of the National Association of Manufacturers and the Congress of American Industry met in New York last week. Nearly 1,000 industrialists attended.

The meeting, even before the delegates were firmly in their seats with registration cards, credentials and badges on display, turned instantly into a smack-down haul away session lambasting the New Deal.

The members attending the conference were apparently unanimous on three things: business is good and getting better; the Administration had nothing to do with it, and, in fact, business is recovering in spite of the New Deal, and last, the one thing needed to restore complete business confidence, revive the era of rugged individualism and larger profits and insure lasting recovery is definite proof that the breathing spell promised by the President will be permanent.

Let us alone, pleaded the industrialists, varying only the tone, which ranged from the piteous plea to the furious cold-steel attack.

The roll of speakers was practically a list of the Nation's big business men. They argued with terrific logic, denounced such brain-trust men as Rexford Tugwell in almost poetic vein, proposed the scrapping of every vestige of the New Deal and the restoration of the "American System," and almost en masse rejected invitations from Maj. George L. Berry, Federal coordinator for industrial co-operation to attend the forthcoming council of industrial progress meet called for Washington, beginning tomorrow.

Yet Maj. Berry expected at least 2,500 business and labor leaders to attend the session, (of 5,000 invited) and a quiet check-up revealed that many business firms which formally refused to attend will have representatives here informally on the lookout for anything.

Labor

Miss Perkins Mediates

Last October 1 Gulf port locals of the International Longshoremen's Union went on strike, demanding union recognition. Two weeks ago Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins appointed a three-man conciliation board to end the walkout, which had taken the lives of 14 and involved 19 ports. Last week, after two months of threatening, I. L. A. President Joseph P. Ryan, of New York, ordered a coast-to-coast boycott against unloading boats from the Gulf until 22 ships lines agreed to accept mediation by Miss Perkins' board. Late in the week Ryan ordered the boycott lifted for 14 lines, declaring they had promised to sign contracts with the I. L. A.

Reverberations of United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis' resignation from the executive council of the American Federation of Labor week before last almost drowned out these developments last week.

Lewis, who a few weeks ago called out 400,000 bituminous miners and wrung substantial wage concessions, met representatives of 100,000 union anthracite miners to draft a wage demand in that industry.

The Government's best statistics on employment, for some time kept secret, were released. They indicated there were 10,915,000 jobless in September and that 5,000,000 had gone to work since March, 1933, unemployment peak.

Demon Rum

Won't Mix With Waffles

If repeal isn't shortly sung out of these United States to the tune of "Maryland, My Maryland," it won't be the fault of the Anti-Saloon League of America convention in St. Louis last week.

I will not eat my waffles brown
Alongside one who gulps beer down;
I'll take my patronage away
And hunt me up a new cafe.

That's a fair sample stanza of a dozen ditties piped by League Superintendent F. Scott McBride, Methodist Bishop James Cannon, jr., of Virginia; William E. (Pussyfoot) Johnson, of New Work, and 900 delegates.

The league retired its founder, Dr. Howard Hyde Russell, at 80, after 42 years' service in various offices. Prohibition by 1945 was as freely predicted as liquor was disparaged. The first target was the White House. They demanded that President Roosevelt dry it up for public functions.

At 5:32 p. m. Thursday the Nation entered its third year of repeal. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., appeared with a red carnation in his buttonhole and said he was "moderately satisfied" with repeal, that liquor taxes had netted the United States $900,000,000 in two years.

Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes announced the PWA was developing a new cocktail.. A PWA financed distillery in the Virgin Islands is doing famously, he said, and the Government can now boast of having its own rum.

Business

Xmas Season Grows!

Business was like this:

Steel production continued to expand, touching 57 per cent of capacity, the highest since the third week in June, 1934.

The American public has $5,000,000,000 more spending money this Christmas than last and will spend more than $30,000,000,000 in retail purchasing during 1935, according to the Chicago Association of Commerce.

The production of electric power declined for the first time in seven consecutive weeks from its consistent all-time highs.

Roger W. Babson predicted two or three years of prosperity ahead.

Peek

Quits Brain Trust Job

The red-faced, taciturn and positive George Nelson Peek cleaned out the drawers of his desk last week and went away mad.

Peek, president of the Export-Import Bank and Foreign Trade Adviser, known as one of the original brain-trusters, has long been a nucleus for storm-clouds during the Administration of President Roosevelt. A warm friend and an admirer of the President, a man of great personal influence in the Midwest Corn Belt and thus a factor in swinging many rural votes to the Roosevelt column in 1932, he has nevertheless persisted in severe criticisms and sometimes bitter denunciation of many New Deal policies.

He came to Washington in May, 1933, as head of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. After disagreements with Secretary Wallace and Rexford G. Tugwell, the latter now Undersecretary of Agriculture, Peek shifted to the State Department to advise Secretary Hull on reciprocal trade matters.

After wrangling with his superior he was shifted to his present post, retaining his post as Presidential adviser on foreign commerce.

A farm implement manufacturer with much power among farmers, he has consistently opposed and denounced the voluntary adjustment method of controlling farm production and the program of unconditional most-favored-nation trade pacts. Both of these policies have been dear to Mr. Roosevelt from the beginning.

The last straw to Peek was the Canadian trade agreement completed over a week ago. When he went to the White House to protest, as was his custom, he came away with an assignment to draw up a report on the pact. This has happened several times when Mr. Peek attempted to resign, as the President was reluctant to let him go.

Peek, saying that he was reducing his Canadian report to simple language, was noncommittal on future plans, as the President talked of Jesse F. Jones, silver-haired Texan who heads the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as Peek's Export-Import Bank successor.

Billions

Citizens Subscribe Bonds

The good citizens of the country, bombarded the last few years with the staggeringly huge figures involved in Government financial operations, merely tossed off a few yawns last week-end when the United States Treasury sought $900,000,000 for work-relief financing and ready cash.

They learned that the public debt now stood at the new all-time high of 30.5 billion dollars (1861, 90 millions; 1916, 1.22 billions; 1919, 25.4 billions; 1930, 16 billions; 1933, 22 billions), and tried hard to enter into the conservative attitude that this is more billions of dollars than there ever will be. But any real indignation over the loan remained in editorial sanctums, as the public, after staring solemnly at the massed statistics for a while, passed on to brighter columns.

The new security issue was equally divided between 2¾ per cent bonds maturing in 1947 and five-year 1½ per cent Treasury notes. Morgenthau also offered holders of Treasury notes maturing December 15 the privilege of exchanging them for either the bonds or for the notes. On that date a total of $418,000,000 in 2½ per cent notes will mature.

The $1,318,000,000 financing operation was oversubscribed five times in the first day.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., was "surprised and delighted," and in explaining the need of a large cash balance added:

"As long as things continue as they are in the world, I have to stay on a 24-hour basis."

Other money news included the arrival on these shores of $135,000,000 of gold from war-fearing Europe in the week ending Wednesday, December 4. This made the total gold supply in the United States $10,009,000,000, the most ever accumulated here, with this country's stock of the metal now more than 40 per cent of the world's supply (about $23,000,000). The Federal Reserve System also noted that the reserves of member banks of the system increased $116,000,000 to a new high mark of $5,905,000,000. Excess reserves over legal requirements rose steeply to the unprecedented figure of $3,180,000,000.

The snap-up of the large issue by 4½ times came as a mild surprise to those newspaper readers who had paid any serious attention to the recent pronunciamento of Orval W. Adams, Salt Lake City banker, recently elected second vice president of the American Bankers Association, that the banks should boycott the Government bond issues to coerce the New Deal into submission. Chortled the Baltimore Evening Sun:

"The bankers may be dumb, but they aren't that dumb."

In the meantime the French political situation as it bears on the franc loomed as of first-rank importance to this country for several reasons. The third French gold crisis, if it brought devaluation of the franc, would likely start a return flow of gold from the United States to France, thus abruptly chiseling down the volume of excess bank reserves here, with their inflationary dangers. It might also reopen the currency warfare as devaluation of the franc would deprive the United States of some of its competitive advantages acquired in the devaluation of the dollar, and would remove from Great Britain any restraints on further devaluation of the pound. This could easily result in a price knockdown here.

Conservative Great Britain, incidentally, far out-new-dealed the New Deal in financial daring by floating two new issues aggregating approximately $1,500,000,000.

Foreign Affairs

War

Rumors Quiet Down!

The story of the war in Ethiopia and of its commercial tentacles spreading through the web of international relations last week was a quiet library sort of story all week—the type which the serious newspaper reader can mull over for hours, squeezing out every drop of significance, every possibility and implication. Into the close-woven net was woven the story of the present tremendous experiment in neutrality that the United States Government is making today—an experiment which has unrealized depths of possibilities for good or evil, for taking this Nation into war as well as keeping it out and one which may bear heavily on the American future place in the sun.

Il Duce went ahead tightening Italy's belt and striving to arrange an air-tight, nailed-down, waterproof, sure-fire cinch source of oil, the life-blood of his mechanized war in Africa.

The cautious diplomats slithered in and out of council halls, stood up and sat down at council tables, discussed endlessly, politely, ineffectively.

The situation had settled. Mussolini's armies were making some small regular traffic forward in Ethiopia. The story was moribund.

With a crash similar to that of the bombs tearing through the iron roof of the American Red Cross Hospital, Italian planes appeared over Dessye suddenly, where Emperor Haile Selassie had moved forward to take charge of his northern army. A number of women and children were hurt and the American hospital was reported almost demolished. A major battle—the first yet—began near Dolo, with great losses on both sides. The Italians have arrived in striking range of the desolate rocky inland country and they will be harassed constantly from now on by bush-fighters and guerrilla bands.

With this battle raging peace measures and quiet talk faded once more toward limbo, although Sir Samuel Hoare and French Premier Laval worked yesterday and Friday on a tentative peace agreement. Italy spurned peace terms.

Nazis

Schacht Issues Warning

Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, the Nazi minister of economics, known as the German Magician because he manages to keep the German people fed and clothed and their business going despite the implied (and sometimes overt) boycott of the civilized countries of the world, last week laid down ten commandments for the economic guidance of Germany.

A conservative and a capitalist, baldish Dr. Schacht, bulwark of the traditional Germany in the midst of the swirl of Nazi dervishes, is the only one in the nation allowed to criticize the Nazi party or its leaders freely. Some of this freedom springs from the fact that the regular army is behind him to a man, it is said. Last week he openly stated that Germany's economic life depends on the preservation of capitalism as a system, a statement about as popular in Berlin as a civet-cat at an afternoon tea.

But notwithstanding the freshness of Dr. Schacht's viewpoint from Germany whence so much offshore breeze news comes, the fuscous atmosphere closed in again with the news of the latest edict of Dr. Hans Kerrl, Reichs Commissioner of Church Affairs, who issued a stern decree depriving the Protestant Confessional Synod of the German church of almost all temporal and spiritual powers. The circle of banned religions is now nearly complete.

Some few pastors stood in their pulpits and charged openly that the government is aiding and abetting the introduction of teachings of heresy. These were brave men.

France

Fascist Problem Huge

Premier Pierre Laval and his save-the-franc cabinet last week escaped overthrow by little short of a miracle when he wrested a vote of confidence, 351 to 219, from the Chamber of Deputies Friday.

Col. Francois de la Rocque and his Croix de Feu, a Fascist organization now claiming 250,000 members, frightened French Communists and Socialists last year into uniting as the Popular Front Party. For weeks now this combine, poorly cemented, but holding majority in the Chamber, has been increasing the pressure on the cabinet to have the Croix de Feu and four similar groups abolished by decree. But Laval clearly was in sympathy to some extent with these groups.

When debate opened on the government's attitude toward the quasi-military organizations, the session was halted by shouting following

. . . Gertrude

An Outline of Vital Events Around the Globe

charges that the five leagues planned a coup d'etat.

By the time debate was resumed Friday, there suddenly had come into being an agreement between leaders of militant political leagues, both Rightist and Leftist, to disband their "troops."

Laval introduced a measure to outlaw "combat organizations or private militia," asked a vote of confidence on his proposal that it be considered at once—and won his third impossible victory since the Chamber convened November 18.

Ships

Naval Conference Begins

The shipyards of the world, comparatively quiet these days, with but the meditative pipe-puffing figures of watchmen to be seen, will soon clang with workmen's hammers and rock to the riveting of steel-plates on fresh-laid keels as a result of a naval conference which will open in London tomorrow, it appeared last week.

For seldom were rays of sunny optimism ever so lacking at any conference about anything as at the forthcoming parley. The drop of a hat, an inopportune sneeze, a temper strained by too great a gap between breakfast and lunch—and the greatest naval-building race in the history of the world will be on.

At least that's what the experts said last week after conning the characters, dispositions and attitudes of the delegates from the greater powers to be represented in the committeeroom in Clarence House, London, for the next pair of weeks. The specter of an arms race may cast so chill a shadow that limitation plans can be agreed to, but no single commentator could be found who would give the conference a 500-to-1 chance of anything that might even jestingly be called success.

The American delegation goes in with the attitude of endeavoring to hold the status quo, since the United States is far underbuilt and can build for some time without going beyond the old treaty. The Japanese are expected to bluff largely for numerical equality with United States and Great Britain, with the grim background realization that this country can build bigger, better, faster and more powerful ships some seven times as fast as Japan's. The British feel they need lots of boats; the French want to build at least as many as Germany is allowed in its bilateral agreement with England. The Italians want complete freedom to build.

Japan

Moves Forward in Asia

Two sides to everything:

"Numerically there are no additions to Japanese troops in North China, merely replacements."—Japanese foreign office.

Japan moved three new army divisions into Tientsin as ten troop trains rolled into Shanhaikwan, North China's gateway, increasing the military pressure.

"Unusual developments in any part of China are rightfully and necessarily of concern not alone to the government and people of China, but to all of the many powers which have interests in China. For in relations with China and in China, the treaty rights and treaty obligations of the treaty powers are in general identical."—Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

The nine-power treaty is obsolete if invoked in connection with North China.—Statement indirectly from Eiji Amau, Japanese foreign office spokesman.

Yin Ju-keng, newly set-up head of the autonomous regime set up in northern Hopei and part of Chahar Province, says: "I stand for the rescue of China and for close work with Japan . . . All the people are friendly."

Yin Ju-keng reported slain while fleeing an angry mob asking tax reductions.

Nothing can be done to prevent the creation of an autonomous state of the five North China provinces—Nanking government.

Gen. Ho Ying-chin, Central Chinese government's war minister, on way north to take charge of the movement against the autonomy program.—Nanking government.

Gen. Sung Cheh-yuan, Hopei-Chahar overlord, is the only man who can avail in the desperate situation.—Nanking government.

"I am unable to check the movement unless the Nanking government takes prompt, effective measures."—Gen. Sung Cheh-yuan.

The Japanese government hopes that Americans will understand that the autonomy project is purely a Chinese local movement, and second that Japan occupies a special position in the Far East.—Japanese foreign office.

The Japanese command Monday requested Gen. Li Yu-hsu, public safety commissioner, to provide enough Tientsin buildings to quarter three divisions (15,000 men) of Japanese troops within two days.

Funniest charge of the week: that of the Japanese foreign office that Gen. Sung Cheh-yuan, Chinese war-lord, loyal to Nanking, had been "bought" by his own government.

Greece

George Ousts Kondylis

Marshal George Kondylis, Greek militarist who executed the series of coups that brought King George II back to his Athens throne week before last, was ousted last week as premier.

Kondylis and his cabinet were unwilling to issue an amnesty to 758 rebels imprisoned in the uprising of last March. The King formed a new cabinet, with Law Prof. Constantine Demerdjis as premier. It proclaimed the amnesty, to general popular satisfaction.

Kondylis announced with much unconcern that at last he would now have time to finish his biography of Alexander the Great.

People

Miss Stein

Learns of Life From Dogs

Gertrude Stein, the Monolith of Modernism, is completing a book, which examines the relations between human nature and the human mind.

It will be based largely on her observation of Pepe and Basket, her two dogs. Pepe, a small spry Chihuahua terrier and Basket, an amiable and fuzzy French poodle, accompanied the brown-granite-faced Miss Stein and her chief stooge, Alice B. Toklas, to her summer home at Billingnin-par-Belley, in the Department of Ain this year, and a large thought occurred to Miss Stein after observing the two dogs gamboling. (Miss Toklas does not gambol.)

The thought was, said Miss Stein:

"One day I began to study the dogs. And afterward I meditated, and that is how I came upon this phenomena. It came to me that politics is a curiously isolated example of a trade based entirely on human nature without constructive aid of the human mind.

"People have a peculiar attitude toward being governed, in that they allow themselves to be governed not by people who think, but by people who have never thought in their lives. Do you think that Hitler and Mussolini ever think? Not on your life! Human nature guides their actions and the people put up with it. Yet in every other department of human relations people demand the use of the human mind."

Her new book will be called "A Geographical History of America."

Writer

Rejuvenated at 78!

Gertrude Atherton, who wrote the best-seller, "Black Oxen," in the turbulent twenties, admitted last week that she is 78 years old.

This didn't palpitate the very latest younger generation, who regard rejuvenation, face-lifting, reactivation and the other names given to physical rehabilitation by scientific aid as almost household words, but it came as quite a shock to the people who were around when Mrs. Atherton's book bombshelled the general consciousness.

Although in the not-too-recent past such matters as rejuvenation had been much discussed and investigated in scientific circles, it was not considered quite what-ho to mention them in mixed company. No one would dream of having sagging features kited.

The war and Mrs. Atherton changed all that. 'Black Oxen" was the tale of a woman who regained her youth, and facial uplift, made practical in behind-the-lines operating rooms, became a recognized part of the social scheme for actresses, actors and aging socialites. Gland treatments, reactivation and the rest followed.

Last week, sprightly, golden-haired 78-year-old Gertrude Atherton, said it is high time eminent subjects speak out about their rejuvenation operations. "Why not?" she said. "Fatigued business men, professonal women, actresses, whose careers demand sustained energy benefit largely by such treatments." She has undergone "the course" twice, moves rapidly and decisively, speaks firmly and says she feels "vigorous as ever."

That was all about rejuvenation.

Gloria

Mrs. Vanderbilt Wept

Gloria Vanderbilt (Mrs. Reginald C.) garbed perfectly in a flowing black gown, dabbed at her eyes last Tuesday afternoon while waiting on a customer in her glittering dress shop, Sonia, Inc., on Fifty-fourth street, New York.

She wept briefly at word that her latest plea for full custody of her daughter, Gloria Laura Morgan Vanderbilt, II, heiress to $4,000,000, had been refused review by the Court of Appeals at Albany, New York State's court of last resort. The 13-word decision ("Motion for leave to appeal denied with $10 costs and necessary printing disbursements,") affirmed the ruling of State Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew that the child's aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, one of the country's wealthiest women, and sister-in-law of Gloria, should have custody of Gloria the Little for five days a week, with the mother getting week-end custody, Christmas and the month of July.

The United States Supreme Court will get the next chance to review Justice Carew's findings.

Djalal

The Cops Paid the Fine!

In 1924 a Persian mob at a religious festival killed Maj. Robert W. Imbrie, United States Vice Consul. On demand of Washington, Persia paid Imbrie's widow $60,000, sent the body down to the sea with guard of honor, footed a $110,000 transportation bill incurred when the United States Navy cruiser Trenton made a special trip over and back for the body.

Week before last Ghaffar Khan Djalal, Minister of Iran (Persia), was arrested and handcuffed by Police Chief Jacob Biddle and Constable Clayton Ellison because his chauffeur was speeding in Elkton, Md. By international custom and United States statute, representatives of foreign governments and their households are immune from process of law.

Last week the mild, elderly Djalal demanded and got apologies from Secretary of State Hull and Gov. Harry W. Nice of Maryland. Hull took the occasion to remind foreign diplomats that they were supposed to obey U. S. laws. The two officers were hailed before an Elkton magistrate and fined $25 for the arrest. They are slated, on Djalal's reiterated demands, to lose their jobs next week—but latest reports were they would be reinstated after the blow is over.

Vanderbilt

Lost on a Crusoe Isle!

The second son of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt (who lost his life when the Lusitania was torpedoed during the World War), George W., was married wiht an enormous fanfare to socialite Miss Lucille Parsons last September in West Orange, N. J. A couple of weeks later he celebrated his twenty-first birthday, as well he might, for he that day came into part of some $20,000,000. He took his bride to the Antipodes for a honeymoon to hunt natural history specimens for the Philadelphia Museum.

Last week this story leaked back to civilization: The couple recently were marooned on a speck of land off Queensland, Australia, while a tempest thwarted rescue efforts of their yacht Bareta. They lived in a grass hut two days and when food ran low George found an old spear, went out on the reef and stabbed crabs. Lucille cooked them in a tin can.

Mothers

Hear About Birth Control

Last week 2,500 attended the first public meeting of the American Birth Control League in New York City since 1923, noted that 250,000 children were born yearly to mothers on relief and denounced withholding birth control information from these mothers. It was said the relief birth rate is 50 per cent higher than among nonrelief families.

Mrs. Thomas N. Hepburn, mother of film star Katherine and four other Hepburns, advocated control. Rabbi Syrney E. Goldstein, of Free Synagogue, appealed to the Catholic Church to withdraw its opposition.

The same day Jesuit Daniel A. Lord took a slap at a five-State birth control conference at St. Louis, saying he might be impressed if the controllers tried as hard to persuade the rich to have children as they do to persuade the underprivileged not to have them.

Dr. Henry Pratt Fairfield, New York University sociologist, told the conference birth control was the world's chiefest hope for peace.

Meanwhile a Berlin court granted a German farmer a divorce because his wife refused to bear children. Nazis said they planned new marriage and divorce laws in consonance with their intense campaign for more Nazi babies.

Youth

Frozen in Freight Car

Taken out more dead than alive last week were:

Glenn Boldan, 14, from the icebox of a freight car in Baltimore after 10 days; Robert Dyson, 42, from a dry well near North Wilkesboro, N. C., after 10 days; Ed Ollinger, 45, from a caved-in ancient tunnel near Los Angeles, after 10 hours. He was seeking legendary Spanish gold.

Farmer Dyson, neighbors said, was on a spree and fell through a rotten well covering. From hunger, thirst, and the exhaustion of digging niches with a stick and climbing to within eight feet of the top of his 25-foot prison, he lost 40 pounds. Hounds led rescuers to him; he will recover completely.

Just before school opened last fall in Minnesota, farmer boy Glenn, rather than enter the ninth grade, ran away to California. He picked fruit, herded sheep, and got a letter from his father saying he was needed at home. With five others two weeks ago he crawled into the ice compartment of a freight car near Monterey, Calif., to ride to Minnesota. He fell asleep and when he woke up the five and all the food was gone the train was going and the compartment hatch was clamped from the outside.

In a tobacco can he caught drippings from a neighboring ice box to drink. In this tobacco can he soaked and ate the sweat band of his hat, the uppers of his shoes, and the seed from balls of cotton he was taking home as souvenirs. Half frozen and unconscious, his moans attracted attention in the railroad yards at Baltimore.

While doctors fought to save his feet from incipient gangrene, his hands thawed out enough for him to write his mother he would be home for Christmas.

Pin

Lillian Swallowed One!

Lillian Lennehan, 15, of Ramsey, N. J., aboard ship in Long Island Sound en route home after a Thanksgiving trip to Boston, was washing her hands. She had a couple of open safety pins in her mouth. A wave rocked the boat, and she swallowed one.

Then things began to hum: The captain flashed a radiogram, a New York newspaper's airplane intercepted it, came down on the rough water, took Lillian from a rowboat, and in a few minutes was flying her to shore. An ambulance waiting at the New York sea plane ramp whisked her to Bellevue.

Trying to extract the pin with forceps, a pair of surgeons managed to punch it down into her stomach where it was hopelessly out of reach. Next day they operated and got it. Day after that Lillian was eating ice cream.

Elsa

Picks Best Dressed Girls

Elsa Maxwell, the gray-haired bouncing little lady who crashed high places in New York and Paris society by being able to "think up things" when parties dragged during the depression years, and to whom the modern version of the treasure-hunt game is imputed, recently revived the old publicity grabbing trick of issuing lists of people and things.

One such was her original list of the world's ten best-dressed men last year. Another was her recent list of the ten happiest married couples. In the last few weeks she named her list of the ten best-dressed women in the world, heading it with Lady Mendl (Elsie de Wolfe). The Paris designers retaliated with their own lists at once; so did the New York designers, and the movement snowballed at once into a national controversy that shook almost nobody.

To the average doting husband who thinks his wife in a new dress is the ten best-gowned women in the world, the whole pother seemed so much waste space, until Arthur O'Neill, New York beauty photographer, and John Robert Powers, head of the best-known agency for professional models, came out last week with a list backed not by opinion as much as by factual evidence.

They chose 11 professional models, beauteous and invariably perfectly gowned, as the best-dressed girls in the world—for the simple reason that the girls selected are paid to be that way. These are the young American damsels who stare nonchalantly out at the public from magazine, newspaper and billboard advertisements while displaying anything from undies to fur coats, or while symbolizing the values of cigarettes, automobiles or soap.

Those chosen were:

Gwili Andre, Danish lass, who causes gasps in evening clothes; Betty Wyman, the cigarette, fur and automobile body symbolizer; Frances Joyce, the sophisticated brunette type and a perfect 14; Janice Jarrett, the Texas beauty, who is called the most photographed girl in America; Frances Donelon, Anita Counihan, Kitty Barrett, Jessie Shanks, Barbara Beckwith and Grace Moore.

Pretty—Why, Of Course!

Crime

Mountains

See Wave of Killings

Following the wide publicity of the trial of Edith Maxwell, 21-year-old Virginia teacher convicted of killing her father with a high heeled shoe when he attempted to spank her for staying out late with the boys, there was a wave of "pappy killings" in the southern mountains:

Haugeman Falin, 16, was lodged in the Wise County Jail with Miss Maxwell, charged with killing his father with a shotgun. The father reportedly was drunk, and the county prosecutor said the lad "seemed to have a case of self-defense." William Teague, 19, of Taylorsville, N. C., was charged with shooting his father to death after a fist fight. Francis Warren, 24, of near Georgetown, Ky., faces manslaughter charges, allegedly having slain his father to protect his sister from a beating.

While a conference of the National Women's Party in Columbus, Ohio, was condemning the conviction of Miss Maxwell, Virginia club women were rallying to her support, but the Business and Professional Women's Clubs of Knoxville and Kingsport, Tenn., forsook the cause, saying the conviction was justified

Jesse

Mother Shoots Livermore

"I'd rather see you dead than drinking."

With that, as best police could piece together the story of a prolonged drinking bout, Mrs. Dorothea Livermore Longcope more than a week ago shot her son, Jesse Livermore, jr., in the chest with a rifle. The six-footer, 15, son of the "Wolf of Wall Street," apparently will recover after what was at first thought to be a hopeless fight with death.

His mother, whose last husband was a New York prohibition agent, was first treated for alcoholism and then indicted for "attempted murder" and freed on $6,000 bail. His father flew to the boy's bed in a Santa Barbara, Calif., hospital and said he would spend every cent he had prosecuting the mother if his son died.

The elder Livermore has won and lost at least three fortunes on the market in the last 20 pears.

Crime

Touches the Northland

News is slow to filter out of the frozen Saskatchewan northlands.

On November 23, Mrs. Ira Allen, whose trapper husband was on a several days' trip around his lines, was called by trapper and neighbor John Harms, 65, to aid his partner, who he said was injured at their cabin. As he opened the door to admit her, Harms slipped on frozen blood and fell, and Mrs. Allen saw a bullet-riddled body within. She picked up her 5-year-old child, fled to her own cabin and barricaded it. Harms tried for four days to smash his way in, bivouacking by a fire at the front door each night. At length he swung away into the wilds crying, "Tell the police they'll find me at Singed Dog Island!"

Three days later this news was relayed by dog team to the fringes of civilization and Canadian Royal Northwest Mounted Police Sergt. F. V. Vernon mushed out under northern lights, 90 miles in two days, to Singed Dog Island. Assisted by a commercial air pilot who had been sent out from headquarters, bringing his plane down on the frozen lake, Vernon arrested the mad trapper without a struggle.

The pilot flew back, but late last week, deep in the ice-bound woods, the Mountie was still guarding his man.

Gangsters

Die in Electric Chair

Arthur Misunas is in the Virginia State Penitentiary. Charles Zeid is under sentence of death in New Jersey. They are the last living members of the criminally powerful Tri-State gang that once was headed by Bobby Mais, the brains, and Walter Legenza, the killer. For last Monday morning, very early, Martin Farrell and Francis Wiley, pasty-faced and trembling, walked praying to their deaths under the swift shock of the electric chair in Rockview Penitentiary, Bellefonte, Pa.

These two, now dead, went to the chair for their parts in the kidnap-slaying of William Weiss, Philadelphia gambler, after his family had spent $8,000 for his release a year ago.

The two said nothing on the short walk to the chair, where they paid for the trail they and Mais and Legenza left in Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and the District of Columbia—a bloody, dirty trail of robberies and slayings and the double-cross.

In 1934, in the spring, Mais and Legenza escaped from Richmond Prison. At the same time Farrell and Wiley crawled through a sewer to freedom from Eastern Penitentiary, Philadelphia. After numerous fatal shootings and other crimes, on October 26, 1934, Weiss was kidnaped from outside his home. Ten days later his family paid in the $8,000. The gang bound Weiss with baling-wire, weighted his feet with scrap-iron, blindfolded and gagged him and placed him in the back seat of a car. Then they drove out of Philadephia. Near Neshaminy Creek Legenza took Weiss' head between his knees and pumped the gambler's head full of bullets. Weeks later most of the gang was rounded up, but Mais and Legenza shot their way out. They were captured and executed in Richmond.

Sports

Olympics

Americans May Play

The United States will be represented in the Olympic Games it appeared yesterday, no matter what the upshot of the anual meeting of the Amateur Athletic Union in New York City.

In a surprise move late yesterday, the forces of Avery Brundage of Chicago, president of the Olympic Committee, pushed through by a narrow margin a motion to table the boycott resolutions. The anti-participationists rallied to drive for a substitute motion, to support America's entry but still strongly protest Nazi athletic policy. Friday the executive committee had split half and half on the boycott resolution.

Despite the tremendous pressure brought to bear by Jews, Catholics and many non-religious but anti-Nazi organizations and individuals, the ideal of sport for sport's sake is to be preserved, at least by the representatives of this country, and no matter what the German attitude turns out to be on the actual playing field.

Clips Pacific Mail Time

While Pan American Airways' China Clipper completed her first transpacific round-trip mail flight, bringing letters from Manila to Alameda, Calif., in six days and thereby cutting two weeks off the mail schedule, a transatlantic air service was virtually assured in a four-nation conference here.

Aviation officials of Canada, the United States, the Irish Free State and Great Britain quickly reached a preliminary agreement, details of which were not disclosed. Postmaster General James A. Farley announced he would seek an appropriation for test flights from Congress in January.

Casualty of the week was the crash of an Army plane attempting to land at Bolling Field in a stiff wind. Maj. George E. Rice and Lieut. Harry H. Geoffrey were killed.

While the radio of Lincoln Ellsworth and his pilot, Herbert Hollick-Kenyon, lost in the Antarctic, had been silent for two weeks, President F. Trubee Davison, of the American Museum of Natural History, announced plans to rush a rescue plane to Ellsworth's supply ship, the Wyatt Earp, and thence into the South Polar wastes in a hunt for the missing fliers.

Never Out of Arrows!

Cupid at work:

Countess Marie-Anne von Wurmbrand-Stuppach, the former Mrs. Clendenin J. Ryan, was married secretly a fortnight ago to her childhood sweetheart, Count Paul Palffy, Hungarian aristocrat and Vienna night-club owner. The bride's former marriage to Ryan, grandson of the late Thomas Fortune Ryan, was annulled recently by the New York State Supreme Court on grounds that she was an "international gold-digging fortune-hunter," on evidence of letters she wrote to Count Palffy, protesting her love for him and her detestation of young Ryan.

Louise Astor van Alen, divorced wife of the late Prince Alexis Mdivani, will soon marry his brother, Prince Serge Mdivani, it was learned last week. Miss Van Alen was married to Prince Alexis in 1931. In 1932 they were divorced, and then after the youngest of the marrying Mdivanis was married to and divorced from Barbara Hutton, Woolworth princess, he was killed in a motoring accident in Spain last August 1. Miss Van Alen's new husband was formerly the husband of Mary McCormic, of the Chicago Opera, and of Pola Negri, former screen star.

Other weddings impending:

Jackie Coogan, 21, quondam child screen star of fame in "The Kid," with Charlie Chaplin, now seeking a screen comeback, with a savings account of over one million dollars, and Betty Grable, 19, budding actress, are engaged, they said in Hollywood last week.

"We're engaged, but I don't know when we'll be married," admitted Claudette Colbert, of the films, clutching the arm of Dr. Joel J. Pressman, throat specialist, of Los Angeles. Dr. Pressman broke up several cameras and ran to hide in the rear of his car in his happiness.

Death

Harvests New Names

Last week these men and women died:

Dr. James Henry Breasted, 70, archeologist, returned from an Egyptian archeological honeymoon with his bride of 50, the former Mrs. Imogene H. Richmond, to die of a throat infection in New York. Founder and director of the Oriental Institute of Chicago University, he did his first digging on the banks of the Nile 40 years ago with a one-donkey caravan. Later he was commander of nine expeditions excavating simultaneously on a 2,000-mile front in the Near East.

Physicians issued a long bulletin to prove he didn't die of a curse inscribed on the inner wall of Pharoh Tutankhamen's tomb. Dr. Breasted lived, ate and sleft for two weeks in that famed chamber. He was among the 40 who first entered it 12 years ago and was the seventh of them to die.

Princess Victoria Alexandra Olga Mary of Windsor and the United Kingdom, shy spinster sister of King George V of Great Britain, succumbed to a stomach ailment at 67. A semi-invalid since girlhood, she dodged state occasions and was little in the public eye. She has been called the cleverest member of the royal family. She was a skillful book binder, photographer and gardener

Miss M. Carey Thomas, more than any other, broke the ice of prejudice against women in the realm of higher education. She was president of Bryn Mawr College from 1894 to 1922, a member of its faculty from its founding in 1884 and on its board of trustees until her death at 69 in Philadelphia. Born in Baltimore, by special dispensation of the trustees of Johns Hopkins she was allowed to attend classes there, hidden from the male students by a curtain rigged in the rear of the room. In 1778 she completed the three years' work for her Ph.D at Leipsic University in Germany, but, being a woman, she was denied it. Again in 1882 she earned, but didn't get, her doctorate at Goettingen University. Finally, after severe grilling by the assembled academic dons, she won the degree at Zurich—summa cum laude.

Charles Richet, erratic French professor whose physiological discoveries laid the base for diphtheria serotherapy and whose influence launched the spiritist doctrine of a psychic goo called ectoplasm, died in Paris at 85.

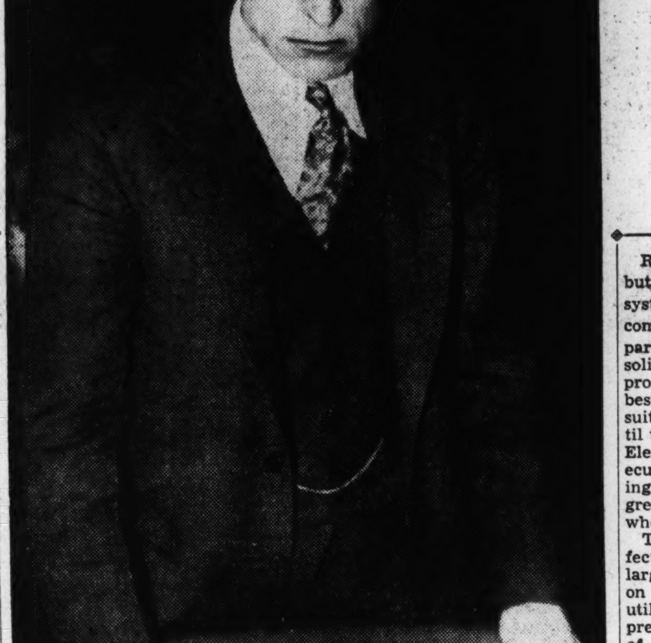
Little SEC Gets Out Its Sling to Do Battle With Utilities Goliath

It was Federal Judge William C. Coleman (left), in Baltimore, who stunned the SEC by handing down a decision that the utilities act was unconstitutional and invalid. But the SEC, with James M. Landis (lower center) at its head, is prepared to fight that decision with the hope of winning before the United States Supreme Court. Meanwhile, injunction suits against holding company registration requirements already reached a high total.



The "power fight" has many angles. The TVA's right to acquire transmission lines for sale of power to municipalities now is nearing a Supreme Court test. Vast Government power production plants like the Wilson dam (upper center) are affected. Right, Federal Judge William H. Kirkpatrick, who shortly will hear the Lehigh Valley Transit Company's petition against the utility holding company act at Easton, Pa.

Big Issues at Stake In the Coming Tests

U. S. Supreme Court Justices May Soon Be Asked To Decide Whether Holding Company "Death Sentence" Is Constitutional.

By Robert C. Albright.

The unprecedented spectacle of a $12,000,000,000 industry brought to bay and fighting for its life, while a small Government agency endowed with large powers closes in, is attracting millions to a ringside that may narrow overnight to the tiny courtroom of the United States Supreme Court.

For this contest, so vast in its magnitude as to defy a large vocabulary of superlatives, is being fought out within the cloistered precincts of the law. And in the end, not one judge but nine, robed with supreme authority to interpret the Constitution, will decide whether Congress has the power to pass "death sentence" on a industry, or to delegate that power to a Government agent.

The beleaguered party, of course, is the vast utility holding company system. The "breathing spell" promised business by the President did not include this business, which the Administration is seeking to break down into mostly State systems, "economically and geographically integrated."

The Government agency which is attempting to do the job is the Securities and Exchange Commission, headed by slight, mild-mannered James M. Landis, late of the Federal Trade Commission. Perhaps the SEC is beginning to realize the enormity of the task ahead of it.

If not, the daily tread of a United States marshal's feet down its corridors should serve as a persistent reminder. The marshal comes bearing gifts—neatly phrased little notices of injunction suits filed against the commission in Federal courts throughout the land by the systems it is sworn to dissolve. For the industry is not docilely submitting. The holding companies, not the commission, are leading the attack.

The utilities struck so swiftly, in fact, that hardly had the SEC drafted its own rules and regulations before Federal Judge William C. Coleman, in Baltimore, passed down a decision that the utilities act in its entirety is unconstitutional and, therefore, invalid. Congress, said the Baltimore judge, is endowed with none of the powers which it so reluctantly delegated to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

It is possible that the ultimate constitutionality of the law may be decided on this case, but not probable, if the commission has its own way. The SEC prefers a case of its own choosing. But "just in case," the Government will file a brief as a "friend of the court," attacking the ruling when an appeal is heard by the United States Circuit Court.

Counsel of SEC Reacts Promptly.

Meanwhile, a steady tattoo of injunction suits against the commission's registration requirements ran up a total of two score and ten in the last fortnight. Virtually all of the major holding company systems sought protection in the courts from a law their attorneys seek to prove is invalid.

December 1—zero hour for registrations—drew on and as yet the SEC had made no legal move. True, the holding companies were not registering, as the law required, but the commission lived in hopes, and modified its rules as an inducement.

Then, one night, John J. Burns, chief counsel for the SEC, received reports that the Electric Bond & Share Co., one of the larger of the holding systems, not only had decided not to register, but was planning counter-action against the Government.

Something told Burns that the time to act was then. He drove his legal staff all night long and bright and early next day the SEC filed its first and only suit to date against the utilities. A New York Federal judge was asked to compel the Electric Bond & Share Co. to register.

This, then, is the case which Burns hopes to make the supreme test of the utility law's validity. The commission virtually said as much in a statement issued after the action was taken and emphasized it again yesterday in a petition filed in District Supreme Court. There may be other suits filed by the Government on various phases of the law, but this is the one the commission now would like to rush to the highest tribunal.

The action was calculated to take the Electric Bond & Share Co. by surprise, and probably did. But in the face of the suit, the E. B. & S. blandly came forth with an offer of co-operation in speeding a constitutional test. Then it proceeded in eight hours to reorganize its own structure, abolishing intercompany service work. SEC lawyers are still studying what effect this might have on the Government's suit.

The first legal move to narrow the spreading maze of utility law litigation to the E. B. & S. suit came in yesterday's motions by Attorney General Cummings and SEC counsel to the District Supreme Court.

In a word, the court was asked to delay action on injuction proceedings brought against the Government by seven utility holding companies, pending a Supreme Court decision in the E. B. & S. case.

This indicated what may be the tenor of the commission's answer to each of the 48 other injunction suits, when and if it decides to answer them.

The local court justices were told that the Government is eager to obtain an early decision on constitutionality.

The motions promised to prosecute the E. B. & S. suit "with all due diligence to secure from the Supreme Court promptly an authoritative determination of the validity of the essential features of the act."

"No public interest will be served by pressing for a decision of this issue in a multitude of suits," read the Government's brief.

"On the contrary, such a course of action will tend to clog the courts, overtax the facilities of the Government, and make against that orderly and economical disposition of the controversy that is the Government's aim."

The story of the Administration's efforts to persuade the utility holding companies to register is a long and interesting one, in which three Government agencies played a part. Utility company lawyers shied at registration like a wild colt sniffs up wind. It looked to them like a nicely baited legal trap. Once their company had registered, they feared, they would be deprived of their constitutional and legal right to test the law's validity.

The Securities and Exchange Commission hastened to assure them this was not the case. Assurances were not enough. So the commission revised its rules to allow companies to make legal reservations in filing. Should a court hold these were not sufficient, the company could withdraw its registration, the SEC provided.

Still the registrations failed to come in. Finally, Federal Judge William H. Holly, of Chicago, helped the commission out a bit by directing trustees for reorganization of Public Utilities Securities Corporation to register, holding such action would not impair their legal status. Judge Holly told the trustees to reserve full constitutional rights for possible resistance to future commission action, however.

Registrations picked up after that, but only one or two of the major systems came in, and about 60 other companies, all told. For the most part, the companies maintained a solid phalanx against registration, protecting themselves meanwhile as best they could through individual suits in the courts. Undecided until the last minute, Associated Gas & Electric, the huge system whose executives were charged with lobbying activities during the last Congress, held out until November 30, when it brought injunction action.

Two weeks before the day for effective operation of the act, the larger companies had determined on a course of action. Most of the utility lawyers shared the view expressed by J. F. Fogarty, president of the North American Co., in a statement to stockholders of a subsidiary, North American Edison Co. It is up to every utility company that considers itself adversely affected by the public utilities act of 1935 to make its own constitutionality test, Fogarty said in effect.

North American itself brought action in the District Supreme Court here. The deluge of suits was so general that the Securities Exchange Commission in a statement made what amounted to an appeal to the companies not to sue.

Injunction actions continued. Now the commission is faced with the task of replying to one or more or all of the. Yesterday's reply jprobably will serve as a model to others.

No 'Breathing Spell' For Power Industry

Government Is Determined To Control The Nation's 12-Billion-Dollar Utility Business to The Fullest Extent Possible.

If registrations were slow in coming in, then applications for exemptions were overnumerous. They were running well up in the hundreds when the commission again modified its regulations to make it unnecessary for a company entitled to exemption to apply.

Decision Left To The Utility.

In so many words, it told each utility holding company to determine for itself whether it came within provisions of the act. If it wasn't entitled to exemption, the implication was, the SEC would let it know soon enough.

Ironically enough, it is a company claiming an exemption that will force one of the first of the many open court fights on constitutionality of the law. Lehigh Valley Transit Co. has petitioned the Federal court at Easton, Pa., for instructions as to whether it and the Easton Consolidated Electric Co., a subsidiary, come within the law.

Federal Judge William H. Kirkpatrick will hear arguments December 18. Should Judge Kirkpatrick rule it is not exempt, Lehigh Valley Transit asks him to decide the holding act unconstitutional in its entirety.

So widespread and involved is the accumulating litigation against SEC that Burns has been obliged to "borrow" legal talent from other departments of Government. First, Robert H. Jackson, Internal Revenue Bureau attorney, was brought over from the Treasury. Burns then took another look at the utility law front and called for more help. James Lawrence Fly, veteran of the first baptismal fire of court testing of New Deal laws, was dispatched temporarily to the SEC from his post of Tennessee Valley Authority general solicitor.

What little consolation SEC lawyers have drawn from the court fight to date has come from relatively minor decisions. Not the least of these, in the eyes of the commission, was the refusal of Federal Judge John P. Nields, in Wilmington, Del., to rule on constitutionality of the utility law without first giving the SEC its "day in court."

A petition had been filed with the Wilmington judge by trustees for the Central West Public Service Co., seeking determination of the law's validity in connection with proceedings for reorganization under section 77B of the bankruptcy act.

Judge Nields ruled the SEC cannot "be destroyed and stripped of its powers without being a party to the proceedings and without having its day in court."

This, say the SEC lawyers, is just what they contended before Judge Coleman in Baltimore before he ruled the law "invalid in its entirety." They believe the Nields decision will strengthen the case against the Coleman on a Circuit Court appeal, although they are involved in the action only as "a friend of the court."

So completely has the commission been on the defensive that so far it has had little time to give to attack. Far from frightening the industry, it has devoted much of its energies to efforts at reassurance.

But, however painless they represent their operations to be, the utilities will continue to look beyond for the club they know is there. They know it is there because they know it is in the act. And that club is—dissolution.

House Hubbub Serves as Warning.

"Death sentence" was what they called it in the House of Representatives, which twice rebuffed President Roosevelt's demands that the law be enacted, but finally jumped through the hoop when the thing was rephrased a bit, and Administration pressure got too hot.

The commission's conciliatory assurances took the form of a statement that there would be no criminal prosecutions for failure to register—not immediately at any rate. This was echoed by Attorney General Cummings, who advised all district attorneys to this effect.

The last Administration move in this direction came only last week from Postmaster General James A. Farley, who let it be known that the mails will continue open to companies which have not registered, at least until constitutionality of the law is determined.

He notified all postmasters that "it is probable that a number of holding companies will not register under the act." That was a safe statement.

Farley added:

"Whatever may be the authority, if any, of the Postmaster General to exclude from the mails matter sent in violation of the act, the Postmaster General does not intend to exclude any company from using the mails, at least not before the validity of the act is judicially determined by the Supreme Court."

Grateful for favors, the utilities nevertheless know such pronouncements amount only to a stay of

Pastors Say 'Most Laudable Citizens' Are the Shut-ins

Their Smiling Patience Termed a Lesson for the Able.

By A. W. Small.

Who are Washington's most lovable citizens?

The Rev. Dr. Alfred Burrows, Washington pastor, when telling of a lady in his congregation noted for her loveliness, said:

"Mrs. G. M. Hutchinson has been on her back for three years without complaint. Cheerful, sweet, kind and understanding, she sees human relationships clearly and without pettiness or prejudice. I visit her to get rested and mentally 'cleaned up.' Then there is Miss Mary Wood, only 19 years old, who has been in bed four years. She is as sweet as she can be. She lost her voice last year and has to speak in whispers. But her nature is like sunshine."

It seems that patience and cheerfulness and human understanding follow physical adversity; that the District's men and women "shut-ins," facing a lifetime within four walls, have developed within their souls a sweetness and light and hope that Washingtonians must concede elect them "most lovable citizens."

Crippled Boy Shows Indomitable Spirit.

Mockabee, at the age of 14, was hit in the knees by a baseball, and infection spread rapidly through his system. He went to the hospital for nearly a year, suffering great and constant pain. Friends said he "gritted his teeth and smiled. A boy of only 14 years!" No sooner had he left the hospital than it was again necessary for him to be confined, this time in a plaster cast. For four years he has been a cripple. But he still takes things as a hero. His spirit is indomitable.

The Rev. Frederick Perkins once said:

"I am constantly shamed by the good deeds that the afflicted perform. For I, with more opportunities, have accomplished far less."

The Rev. Mr. Perkins was thinking of a lady, now dead, when he said this. "She was deaf, but she learned lip reading, and how not to talk too loudly. She was interested in the Red Cross. Deafness she never accepted as an excuse, and she concealed it completely. Her friends held her in reverence for her generous and kind heart."

Phil McGrath is 47 years old. At the age of 2 he entered Washington's Home for Incurables, and has been there ever since. He has never walked. Although infantile paralysis confines him to his wheel chair, he repairs the home's furniture, tends the switchboard, delivers newspapers to the inmates, wheels himself on errands into town, and helps with bandage work. "I'm very proud of Phil," the superintendent of the home, has stated. "He's so helpful and so cheerful."

Another of the home's cheerful, lovable inmates is Rodney Sackett, who took sick in South America in 1926 and was brought back to Washington. His friends love to visit this man.

Sidney Hull, born here, was blinded twelve years ago at the Bureau of Standards. Upon temporarily regaining partial eyesight, he joined a large electrical firm in Chicago, and then to his despair found darkness closing in on him again. If at this time in his life angry flare-ups and a disagreeable disposition had shown themselves uppermost in his dealings with others, this might have been excused. But he did not get angry. He never said a harsh word. Kindness toward others marked the man even more than it had before. Hull went abroad, but operations were unsuccessful in restoring his sight.

Clerics Give Examples From Experiences With the Sick.

And then a wonderful thing happened to him. His electrical firm decided it needed him so badly that he was given all the secretaries he could use and put back in his research. As a result he has invented several improvements for church organs. He is a member of the school board and of the city council of his adopted suburban Illinois community. On the side he manufactures a silver polish of his own discovery.

"I can see more mentally than I could with my eyes," Hull has told his old Washington friends, laughing. During Hull's years of blindness, he has aided many "down-and-out" men. One of these men is now the general sales manager of Hull's polish factory.

Charles and Edward Simmons are 12 and 13 years old, respectively. Their muscles are diseased; Charles' are dwarfed, Edward's enlarged. Neither can walk. At their age they know little about the world, and not much more about Washington. But they have tamed a squirrel that comes to visit them; and the way they treat "Pete" shows that they, too, have the strange quality of patience that makes for lovability.

Sweet Dispositions Follow Adversity.

Further examples could be named locally, as well as nationally, to show that sweet dispositions follow great physical adversity. Blind Senator Gore is outstanding. Samuel Lefschetz, famous mathematical professor, with one hand burned off, is another example. William Henry Eustance, who died in the fall of 1928 at 83, and who was crippled early in life, made a million dollars and gave it to a school and hospital for crippled children. Blind Boone, colored pianist, toured the world and aided charity in a big way.

Washington's own blind young man, Bradford Moses, is now studying in Catholic University, too modest to claim credit for his conquering of obstacles.

The poet Shelley says in his "To a Skylark:" "We look before and after and pine for what is not." That is true of all mankind. But those who have so little ahead, those balked by physical obstacles, seem untouched by regrets. They "carry on," smiling.

Gallery Glimpses

By Robert C. Albright

DON'T take too much stock in this talk about the next session of Congress being a short one, that will pass a few appropriation bills, then adjourn in time for the national party conventions and some leisurely Congressional campaigning.

The President would like to make it short, and has said so. Reflecting this view, Representative James P. Buchanan thinks Congress ought to finish its business and get away in April. Speaker Joe Byrns was a trifle more conservative before he left for the Orient—he said May.

Congressional leaders always lean a bit on the optimistic side when they are forecasting adjournments. Records over a good many years will show they usually missed their guess by more than a month—on the short side.

Four years ago they tried to get away before the political conventions, and fell rather wide of the mark. They solved their dilemma by taking recesses over the conventions and returning to Washington for more hard work.

There are three good reasons why they may be forced to do the same thing this coming session.

Reason No. 1 is that ever-expanding question mark hovering over the Supreme Court of the United States. What the high court will do is unpredictable, but with virtually the New Deal's entire legislative record coming up for review, it is a safe bet that one or more of the measures will be relayed back to Congress for some quick legal patchwork.

Reason No. 2 is the bonus. Just when the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars thought the bonus was in the bag, the Administration dropped a gentle hint that its front against the bonus remains unchanged. That means a fight, and a long one. It may mean a veto, and an attempt to override a veto.

Reason No. 3 is the private preference of some members to do their campaigning from the Washington sounding board. Speeches made in Congress, political or otherwise, can be sent back home and distributed all over a State, under Government frank. That makes personal campaign funds stretch farther.

Besides, there are one or two other reasons (the present work relief program folds up in July) why members think "back home" is a good place not to be too far in advance of November elections.

Senator Homer T. Bone, of Washington, who is fresh back from the States, thinks the Constitution isn't the outstanding campaign issue now, but will be. Invalidation of one New Deal law by the Supreme Court will be sufficient to shove it to the forefront overnight, in the opinion of the Nor'westerner.

IF that tall, dignified looking chap treads on your corn as he squeezes into your row of seats at the movie, don't protest too hastily—he may be a Representative or even a Senator.

Members of Congress, as a general rule, are avid movie goers, and critics, too. On a dull day in the lobbies you can get a dramatic criticism on any show in town. And it's usually a pretty good criticism, although Nelson Bell has spoiled us a bit.

Members are not only interested in cinematic attractions, they are interested (aren't all of us) in getting a seat when they go to a show. It is to this zest for comfortable seating on the part of the boys from the hill that Washington owes those periodic announcements of seats by downtown movie doormen.

The hill contingent threatened to pass a law limiting the number of tickets sold to the number of seats. The threat was sufficient.

All of which is merely a preamble to our own private poll of Capital movie goers. First honors are awarded to Senator Henry F. Ashurst, of Arizona. His record, we are reliably informed, is six shows in one day.

Senator Ashurst, who has been around the Capitol ever since Arizona became a State, is a philosopher of parts, and a never-ending source of solace to colleagues. At least one of their number insists he has "psychic" powers.

Not many years ago, this other Senator was running for re-election. It was a tough campaign, and Ashurst's colleague was pretty blue about his chances.

One day he confided in the Arizonan.

"You haven't got anything to worry about," comforted Ashurst. "Here, I'll jot down what your majority will be on this slip of paper. Put it away, and don't look at it until the day after elections."

The Senator followed instructions. He won by a broad margin. Curiously he dug up the note Ashurst had given him, and read it with amazement. The Arizonan had guessed within 400 votes of his final plurality.

WHEN Abraham Lincoln threescore and some odd years ago at Gettysburg paid his famous tribute to this "Government of the people, by the people and for the people," he reckoned without party rule that increasingly has taken this Government in hand.

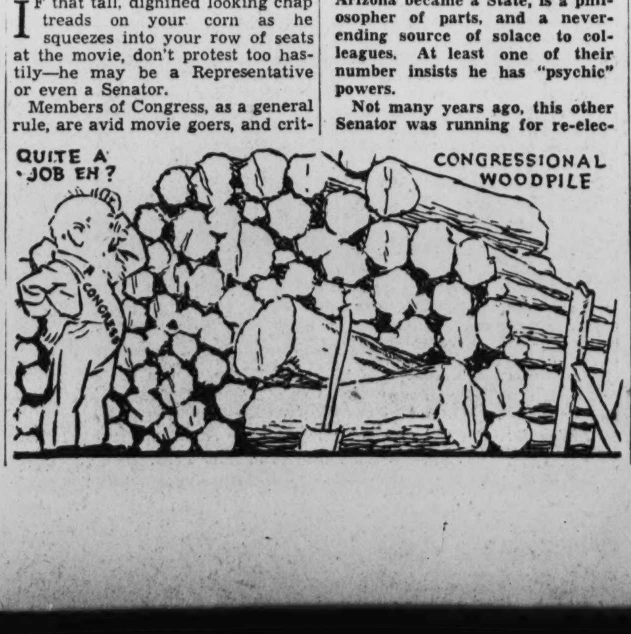
At least, that is the opinion of one prominent Democratic Congressional leader, who thinks too much emphasis is laid on party control in periodic reorganization of Capitol committees.

Nowadays, when a new party rides into power, minority representation on committees is cut down to the bare ratio of the number of members they have in House or Senate, regardless of the abilities of the members discarded.

This Democratic leader, who is an outstanding chairman of an important committee, thinks this practice should be modified, and privately is negotiating in his own committee for more adequate Republican representation.

"If Lincoln were here today," he philosophized the other day, "he probably would revise those quotes to read, 'Government of a party, by a party and for a party.'"

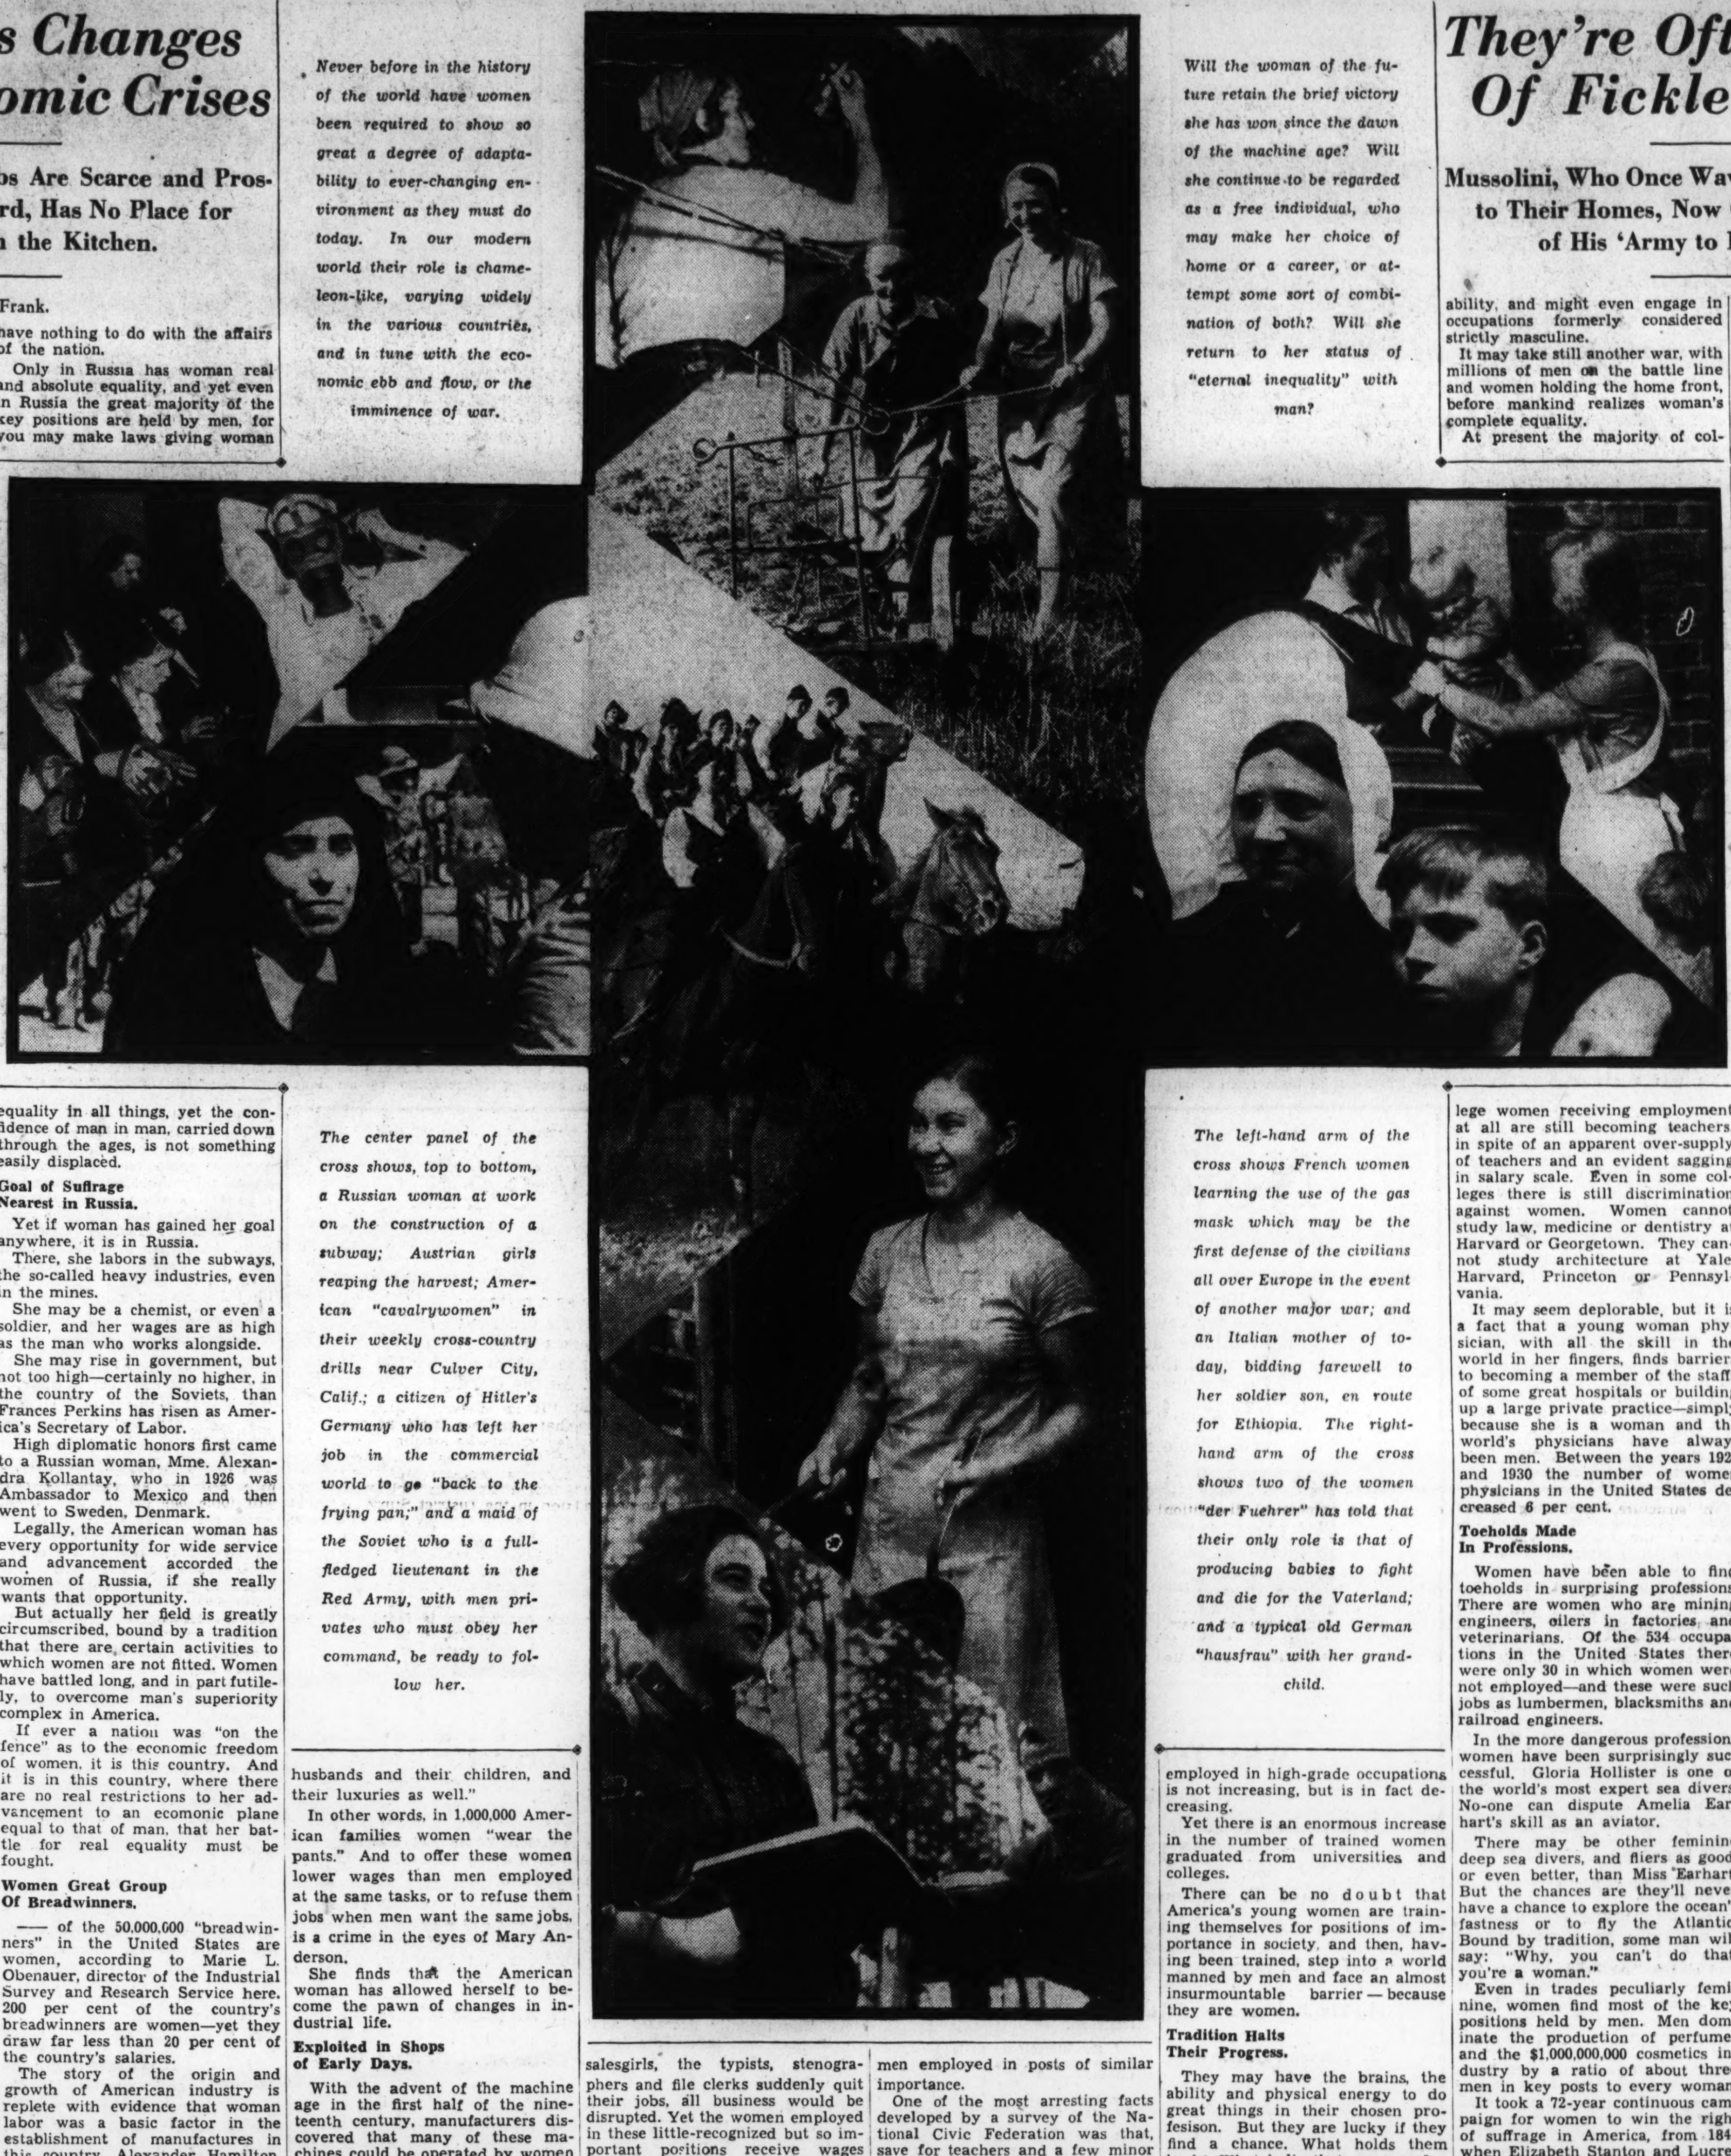
Some Democrats will call that downright heresy.



Women of Many Nations Bear the Cross of Depression—and of War!

Never before in the history of the world have women been required to show so great a degree of adaptability to ever-changing environment as they must do today. In our modern world their role is chameleon-like, varying widely in the various countries, and in tune with the economic ebb and flow, or the imminence of war.

Will the woman of the future retain the brief victory she has won since the dawn of the machine age? Will she continue to be regarded as a free individual, who may make her choice of home or a career, or attempt some sort of combination of both? Will she return to her status of "eternal inequality" with man?



The center panel of the cross shows, top to bottom, a Russian woman at work on the construction of a subway; Austrian girls reaping the harvest; American "cavalrywomen" in their weekly cross-country drills near Culver City, Calif.; a citizen of Hitler's Germany who has left her job in the commercial world to go "back to the frying pan;" and a maid of the Soviet who is a full-fledged lieutenant in the Red Army, with men privates who must obey her command, be ready to follow her.

The left-hand arm of the cross shows French women learning the use of the gas mask which may be the first defense of the civilians all over Europe in the event of another major war; and an Italian mother of today, bidding farewell to her soldier son, en route for Ethiopia. The right-hand arm of the cross shows two of the women "der Fuehrer" has told that their only role is that of producing babies to fight and die for the Vaterland; and a typical old German "hausfrau" with her grandchild.

Their Status Changes With Economic Crises

Hitler's Reich, Where Jobs Are Scarce and Prosperity a Forgotten Word, Has No Place for Them Except in the Kitchen.

By Pat Frank.

On September 6, 1934, Benito Mussolini thundered to all the women of Italy to return to their homes and to the business of bearing babies and ordered them to leave the industrial field to men.

Last week a less masculine Mussolini shouted a special appeal to the women of Italy as the workers who will break the world's economic ring of steel around Italy. They will be, he said, the advance guard of his army of defense against "hateful sanctions."

And in her prim office in the Labor Department, Director Mary Anderson, of the Women's Bureau, chuckled at this latest evidence of the world's cynicism toward women and intimated that Mussolini had finally seen the light—and had abandoned his "bear babies" attitude.

In the sanctums of America's great general staff, the officers whose business is to plan for our future wars vowed they would not make the same mistake as Mussolini, and continued to chart the course which calls for the mobilization of America's women-power in wartime.

Another Chapter In Ancient Story.

Thus another cynical chapter is written into the history of what is perhaps the greatest problem facing mankind today—shall women step backwards into that dark age when they were but subservient creatures for begetting children and cooking meals, or shall they go forward with man, shoulder to shoulder?

On a dozen different fronts, women, in their enternal fight for that equality with the male which they have really never secured, now face their crisis. They are at their turning point. Either now they acknowledge man as of a superior race, and again shackle themselves with the bonds of—why quibble about a word—slavery, or they present a united front to man and say:

"Almost anything that a man can do, women can do. We are gifted alike with brains. We demand the right to earn our way in the world and not be shunted into inferior jobs, or told to return to our homes to bake and sew and have children—merely because we are women."

The truth is that women are the buffers of the modern industrial age and the modern state. In times of depression, when there are two persons for every job—the man demands that job—and usually gets it. But when a tremendous crisis faces a nation, a war, or a super-prosperity resulting from a war far away, then women are the pampered and flattered tools of those who fight to rule.

War is a man's game and yet, if America ever goes to war again, that war cannot be fought without women. For every soldier at the front the War Department will be forced to place a woman into industry.

War Operates As Opportunity.

In Italy, this strange fact has suddenly dawned upon Benito Mussolini, who, worried by the pressure of stringent economic sanctions, knows that his troops cannot fight at the front and man his munitions factories at one and the same time.

So the women of Italy, who have so repeatedly been ordered to stay at home and see how many little Giuseppes and Antonios they can bring into the world for future use as aviators, or aviators' targets, now are presented with a different role.

As Italy's Blackshirts marched deeper into Ethiopia last week, Mussolini shouted to 900 women, Gold Star Mothers, and the widows of those who died in the last war:

"You have all the right and all the merit to constitute the advance guard of a feminine Italian Army, to which the regime has entrusted the task of reacting with system, with energy, and with inflexibility against the hateful economic siege which surrounds Italy."

So in Italy women have their chance once again—but it took a war to give it to them.

And Hitler, with his eyes on Italy and her problems—will he alter his own recent edict to the women of Germany to return to the kitchen? Like Mussolini, Hitler asked a halt to women's progress, spurred primarily by the years of depression when all men could not find jobs. Let the woman cook, said Der Fuehrer, and the man work, and all will be tranquility in the home.

French Women Can Not Vote.

But what will happen in Germany when once again the Prussian Guard goose-steps to the front? Once again you will see the trams on Berlin's streets driven by women, while their sisters work in the munitions plants to provide war's sinews, and once again some of the women of Germany will be deluded into believing that man has granted economic equality.

Of course, German women can vote, but voting under an absolute dictatorship is listed among the more futile occupations.

In France, a woman can do anything, everything — except vote. In the fields, the peasant wife labors alongside her husband and sons, and it is the woman, in France, who so frequently supports her family.

But vote? Veritably, what does my pretty Nanette know of politics? And, disregarding the long tradition of feminine heroism, extending from Joan of Arc to Madame Curie, the Frenchman relegates the women of France to the position of those who may earn a living, who may engage in a profession, who may support a family, but who may have nothing to do with the affairs of the nation.

Only in Russia has woman real and absolute equality, and yet even in Russia the great majority of the key positions are held by men, for you may make laws giving woman equality in all things, yet the confidence of man in man, carried down through the ages, is not something easily displaced.

Goal of Suffrage Nearest in Russia.

Yet if woman has gained her goal anywhere, it is in Russia.

There, she labors in the subways, the so-called heavy industries, even in the mines.

She may be a chemist, or even a soldier, and her wages are as high as the man who works alongside.

She may rise in government, but not too high—certainly no higher, in the country of the Soviets, than Frances Perkins has risen as America's Secretary of Labor.

High diplomatic honors first came to a Russian woman, Mme. Alexandra Kollantay, who in 1926 was Ambassador to Mexico and then went to Sweden, Denmark.

Legally, the American woman has every opportunity for wide service and advancement accorded the women of Russia, if she really wants that opportunity.

But actually her field is greatly circumscribed, bound by a tradition that there are certain activities to which women are not fitted. Women have battled long, and in part futilely, to overcome man's superiority complex in America.

If ever a nation was "on the fence" as to the economic freedom of women, it is this country. And it is in this country, where there are no real restrictions to her advancement to an ecomonic plane equal to that of man, that her battle for real equality must be fought.

Women Great Group Of Breadwinners.

—— of the 50,000,000 "breadwinners" in the United States are women, according to Marie L. Obenauer, director of the Industrial Survey and Research Service here. 200 per cent of the country's breadwinners are women—yet they draw far less than 20 per cent of the country's salaries.

The story of the origin and growth of American industry is replete with evidence that woman labor was a basic factor in the establishment of manufactures in this country. Alexander Hamilton, when the republic was born, cited the women whose handicraft in the home had helped support a family before the advent of the machine as the labor available for, and necessary to, projected industries.

Discrimination against women in industry is the thorn in the side of the Women's Bureau at the Labor Department. Director Mary Anderson, sturdy and strong-voiced champion of her sex, believes that the world must realize the woman's right to earn a living.

"Of the 10,000,000 women workers, few people know that 1,000,000 are actually heads of families. It is their earning capacities which supply the necessities of life for their husbands and their children, and their luxuries as well."

In other words, in 1,000,000 American families women "wear the pants." And to offer these women lower wages than men employed at the same tasks, or to refuse them jobs when men want the same jobs, is a crime in the eyes of Mary Anderson.

She finds that the American woman has allowed herself to become the pawn of changes in industrial life.

Exploited in Shops of Early Days.

With the advent of the machine age in the first half of the nineteenth century, manufacturers discovered that many of these machines could be operated by women as easily as men. So women were hired, especially in the textile industry, in thousands of factories.

For many of these women this was their chance for economic freedom—a chance to earn a living, a chance for independence.

And yet they sold themselves too cheaply. The price they paid for independence was lower salaries than men received. And that tradition persists and is yet to be broken down.

Manufacturers still locate their factories where they know they can find an available supply of woman labor. For woman factory labor is still regarded as cheap labor.

Everyone knows that should the salesgirls, the typists, stenographers and file clerks suddenly quit their jobs, all business would be disrupted. Yet the women employed in these little-recognized but so important positions receive wages from 10 to 25 per cent less than men employed in posts of similar importance.

One of the most arresting facts developed by a survey of the National Civic Federation was that, save for teachers and a few minor profesisons, the number of women employed in high-grade occupations is not increasing, but is in fact decreasing.

Yet there is an enormous increase in the number of trained women graduated from universities and colleges.

There can be no doubt that America's young women are training themselves for positions of importance in society, and then, having been trained, step into a world manned by men and face an almost insurmountable barrier — because they are women.

Tradition Halts Their Progress.

They may have the brains, the ability and physical energy to do great things in their chosen profesison. But they are lucky if they find a chance. What holds them back? What halts their progress?

The best authority—the Woman's Bureau of the Labor Department—says it is simply tradition, an old fogyism on the part of men that woman has not been able to break down or overcome.

Nowadays, the great majority of school teachers are women. But before the Civil War, when the male teachers laid away their ferules and chalk and picked up a gun, the great majority of the teachers were men.

It took a war to make America allow its young to be taught by women. It took another war—the World War—to convince men that women might have some executive ability, and might even engage in occupations formerly considered strictly masculine.

It may take still another war, with millions of men on the battle line and women holding the home front, before mankind realizes woman's complete equality.

They're Often Pawns Of Fickle Dictators

Mussolini, Who Once Waved Women Back Sternly to Their Homes, Now Calls Them Vanguard of His 'Army to Fight Sanctions.'

At present the majority of college women receiving employment at all are still becoming teachers, in spite of an apparent over-supply of teachers and an evident sagging in salary scale. Even in some colleges there is still discrimination against women. Women cannot study law, medicine or dentistry at Harvard or Georgetown. They cannot study architecture at Yale, Harvard, Princeton or Pennsylvania.

It may seem deplorable, but it is a fact that a young woman physician, with all the skill in the world in her fingers, finds barriers to becoming a member of the staffs of some great hospitals or building up a large private practice—simply because she is a woman and the world's physicians have always been men. Between the years 1920 and 1930 the number of women physicians in the United States decreased 6 per cent.

Toeholds Made In Professions.

Women have been able to find toeholds in surprising professions. There are women who are mining engineers, oilers in factories, and veterinarians. Of the 534 occupations in the United States there were only 30 in which women were not employed—and these were such jobs as lumbermen, blacksmiths and railroad engineers.

In the more dangerous professions women have been surprisingly successful. Gloria Hollister is one of the world's most expert sea divers. No-one can dispute Amelia Earhart's skill as an aviator.

There may be other feminine deep sea divers, and fliers as good, or even better, than Miss Earhart. But the chances are they'll never have a chance to explore the ocean's fastness or to fly the Atlantic. Bound by tradition, some man will say: "Why, you can't do that, you're a woman."

Even in trades peculiarly feminine, women find most of the key positions held by men. Men dominate the production of perfumes and the $1,000,000,000 cosmetics industry by a ratio of about three men in key posts to every woman.

It took a 72-year continuous campaign for women to win the right of suffrage in America, from 1848 when Elizabeth Stanton and Lucretia Mott enlisted Susan B. Anthony to her cause, until the seventeenth amendment was adopted on August 26, 1920.

For this cause, women spent their whole lives. In 1872 Susan Anthony was arrested in New York for voting. And thereafter, women fought and were rebuffed as they battled for their ballots.

There are about as many women voters in this country as there are men, but in the key posts of Government there are pitiably few women. Yet a united woman's lobby could place just as many women in high posts as men—if women could be united.

Women even allowed the Government to take a back-handed slap at their sex when the economy act of 1933 stipulated that if a husband and his wife were both employed by the Government one would be subject to dismissal. It was naturally assumed—and in practice it worked out that way—that since the husband usually made a higher salary, the wife would be deprived of a job.

The hardship thus imposed on workers in the lower-salaried brackets is now a matter of history. There are stories—true stories—of couples deprived of the right to marry because they knew one would lose his or her job.

And for a man and a woman in love, faced with such a rigid bar to marital happiness, they either had to forfeit their ethics and live together without marriage, or marry and see their combined income cut in half.

But should there come a great national crisis, things will be different. War and prosperity are the high spots of woman's battle for independence.

With the World War and the stepping up of production and the greater demands upon industry, women eagerly grasped a new freedom given them in return for their service as workers. Opened to them were new jobs and greater remuneration, and the newspapers of the immediate post-war period are filled with instances of the great work done by women.

Women Pawns Of Depression.

But when the slump of 1921 arrived, there came the growl of men that women had taken their jobs. And one by one, women were eased out of their posts and sent back to their knitting—home knitting. Immediately, "woman's place was in the home."

Prosperity came again. Land boomed in Florida and California. Skyscrapers rose in Chicago and New York. The cotton fields of the southland bloomed luxuriantly, and the planters received big prices for their bales. Automobiles were purchased on an unprecedented scale.

The stock market towered. Office workers were in demand. Factory workers were needed — and woman was queen. Woman's place, then, was shoulder to shoulder with man — working towards the new prosperity.

Then came the black depression, and with it the old cry:

"Woman's place is in the home. Women are taking the bread out of the mouths of men."

And the women who so blithely strove for their independence and a place in the economic sun were once again shunted away from a man's world.

Now that it is somewhat easier to find employment, places are again opening for women. But first, it will be noticed, men will get the jobs. Women can have the residue if she wants it.

Depression Sent Her Back Home.

By a strange paradox, women's great chance will come with another war—if war comes.

The United States could not fight a major war without drafting women into industry on a gigantic scale, in the opinion of some of the best minds of the general staff.

In the Munitions Building on Constitution avenue is the War Department's Planning Board, directly under the supervision of the Assistant Secretary of War. It is a division which frankly is laying plans for the mobilization of the Nation's resources in case of war. And one of its biggest tasks is to replace man-power drawn to the battle line by woman-power in the industrial strongholds.

An "ordinary war" would draw about 5,000,000 men into uniform, and would place no greater strain on the industrial world than did the World War. But a more serious war—one lasting more than two years—would be a war of totality, the War Department contemplates, and in such a war women would be the Nation's greatest reservoir of labor.

The War Department knows that the United States merely sipped war in 1917-18. When and if the next war comes, things will not be so easy. A War Labor Administration will be immediately set up, and it will be this board's big job to replace manpower in the Nation's factories, as quickly as men are placed in uniform. Manpower will be replaced, largely, by woman-power.

Ratio Figured For Super-War.

The War Department, it is learned, believes that in a super-war the ratio of women employed in industry will rise from 20 per cent of the total employed to 35 per cent.

That means that 8,000,000 women—now forced to stay at home, or hunt jobs—will be rushed into the Nation's industrial structure.

Eight million women, who even now may want jobs, will find them if war comes!

They'll find them, then, whether they want them or not. Man-made wars demand stringent measures.

This is the plight of the feminine half of this country today. Whether women will continue to be the pawns of a man-directed world is a matter which they alone hold in their hands.

By united effort, many feminine leaders unreservedly believe, women can achieve real equality on every plane.

But man's challenge to woman is: Have women the confidence in each other—do they have the faith in their own ability—to demand their half of the world?

Britain Now Training Fliers Who Will Man Atlantic Liners

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 7.—Preparations which look forward to the day when airplanes will fly the Atlantic on fixed schedules are progressing past the stage of mere planning.

The probability of experimental Atlantic flights by next year has been forecast by Sir Eric Geddes, chairman of Imperial Airways Limited. Training of the pilots is to be started at once. Some of them are to be trained at what is known as "Britain's Air University" at Hambles, England, with skill in the handling of seaplanes to be the basic requirement for a diploma.

New details meanwhile are being made public concerning construction of the 29 large flying boats which are to be used in the empire air services to Africa, Egypt, India and Australia—and eventually across the Atlantic.

The pilots, with the title of captain, will command ships which will have accommodations for 24 passengers by day and 16 for night flying.

While further improvements in construction are anticipated before a transatlantic service is definitely established, first air travelers across the ocean can expect to hurry over the waves in flying boats of the following design:

The hull will be divided into two decks, with the main or lower deck divided in turn into five compartments. There will be a large cabin for seven persons, kitchen and lavatories, a small cabin for three, a large promenade cabin, an aft cabin, and a freight compartment.

Instead of the pilot's cockpit there will be the "captain's bridge," where, surrounded by assistants, radio men and mechanics, the commanding officer will direct the flight.

Meals will be served, and for night flying there will be bunks, built one above the other, after the manner of ship travel.

The passengers will be able to walk up and down the promenade cabin, watching the waves through large windows.

Four engines at least, mounted in the thickness of the wings, will provide the motive power, with a cruising speed of 150 miles an hour or more.

A survey is now being made of possible terminals for the projected transatlantic service.

Port Botwood in Newfoundland has already been approved as a terminal, it is reported, while Bantry Bay in the south of Ireland is being suggested as an eastern port of call.

Under calm weather conditions, it is held, a flying boat of modern construction, with a cruising speed of 150 miles an hour, should negotiate the distance from Bantry Bay to Newfoundland in 12½ hours. If a 35 mile an hour wind is blowing the journey will take at least four hours longer.

Arizona Authorities Clamp Lid On Remote Polygamy Colony

Kingman, Ariz., Dec. 7.—An attempt to stamp polygamy out of northern Arizona will get under way here Monday when the State brings to trial three cultists charged with "open and notorious cohabitation."

Prosecutor Bollinger expects stubborn opposition because he was twice thwarted when he attempted to proceed against the trio in Short Creek, their isolated colony, and because of the colony's religious belief and pride in plural wives.

The cultists, excommunicated by the Latter Day Saints Church, declare that a member's heavenly reward shall be based on the number of his wives and children.

They have strict regulations which forbid liquor, tea, coffee, tobacco, profanity and work on Sundays. Modern dances are banned as unfitting young girls for motherhood. Instead the cultists dance the old-time waltz, two-step and quadrille.

The trial of I. C. Spencer, Price Johnson and Sylvia Allred will bring to a climax the long investigation that uncovered what authorities here believe is the only admitted polygamy cult in the United States.

Seventy miles from a railroad and situated in a mountainous region north of the Grand Canyon, Short Creek is one of the most inaccessible white settlements in the Nation.

The investigation into what Bollinger charges is the general practice of plural marriage resulted when women of the community identified themselves as "plural wives" in filling out applications for relief.

Montana 'Wheat King' Becomes First U. S. Migratory Farmer

San Francisco, Dec. 7 (AP).—Thomas Campbell, erstwhile Montana "wheat king" whose domain has shrunk to a mere 22,000 acres, may become the country's No. 1 migratory farmer.

He has decided to try following the seasons with his tractors, plows, harvesting machines and workers, growing wheat in summer on Montana's plains and flax in winter in California's valleys

Campbell said today he got the idea from an experiment conducted by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, not from observing the annual migration of hundreds of agricultural workers between the two States.

"When the Department of Agriculture," he said, "found in India a flax—it's called punjab—which will grow in the winter time in the Imperial and San Joaquin Valleys, it occurred to me here was an opportunity to make grain raising a year-around affair.

"Why shouldn't the boss move with his men as they strike out for warmer climes when winter settles down on the northern front? At any rate, I decided to give it a trial, in a small way at first."

Campbell, former agricultural consultant of the Soviet government, said he had purchased no California land yet, but was looking some over. The idea had not yet reached the stage of moving any men or equipment, he added.

Japan—Is Her Real Purpose the Military Domination of All Asia?

Does a close survey of Japanese policy in the Far East indicate that the natural resources of North China are the lure that is drawing her armies into that territory? Or does it appear that military and imperialist ambitions—the will to make Japan the controlling power throughout Asia, are leading her to further consolidate her position on the continent, possibly with an eye to a coming duel with the Soviet for supremacy in the Orient?

Imperialist Projects Date Back 40 Years

They Began With the Sino-Japanese War in 1894, Which Announced the Rise of a New Naval Power in the World.

By Walter J. Eddington.

In her occupation of Manchuria and the subsequent creation of the puppet state of Manchukuo, Japan's sole purpose, in the eyes of many, was to gain control of the mineral and agricultural resources of that country to supply the needs of her rapidly increasing population at home. However, after a close study of Japanese activities on the continent during the past 40 years, the occupation of Manchuria appears to be simply another step in the plan of Japanese imperialism (which began with the Sino-Japanese War of 1894-95) for ultimate control of all eastern Asia.

The Sino-Japanese War of 1894-95 was essentially a war of prestige. China had assumed the relation of a suzerain over the independent kingdom of Korea which Japan would not admit. But Japan emerged victorious and by her sweeping successes had shown conclusively that the once dreaded "sleeping lion" of China was nothing more than a sickly kitten. The short work made of China's resistance on land, and the naval battle off the mouth of the Yalu River, when a superior Chinese fleet was defeated, were events that heralded to the world that a new naval and military power had arisen in the Far East.

"Honest Brokers" From Europe.

Japan's victory gave the European powers an opportunity to offer their services to humiliated China as "honest brokers." On one pretext after another, these "honest brokers" began to treat China as an artichoke, to be eaten leaf by leaf. Germany, making the murder of two missionaries her excuse, descended on China and seized Kiaochau, with its splendid harbor, in the province of Shantung. France got a lease and railway concession in the south—Port Arthur was leased to Russia, and Great Britain, unable to resist the imitative impulse, seized the port of Weihaiwei on the Shantung peninsula as an offset to Germany's concession.

Besides, Great Britain held a naval station at Hongkong, and there were European settlements, concessions and spheres of influence at Shanghai, Hankow and other places. Europeans were under extraterritorial jurisdiction of their Consular courts, but Japan enjoyed no similar standing in China. Thus, Japan was placed in the category of an uncivilized or semi-civilized nation along with China and Turkey.

Although the Chinese were decisively defeated, Japan was robbed of the fruits of victory by the intervention of the European powers. This was a severe blow to her prestige which she could not long endure. With the European powers hemming her in, Japan had to struggle for breathing space. The Russian threat to Korea brought matters to a crisis and in 1904, Japan again drew her sword, this time against Russia. Russia lost Port Arthur, was routed in the great battle of Mukden, and the Russian Baltic fleet, after a long and weary voyage around the Cape of Good Hope, was literally wiped off the sea at Tsushima, May 27, 1905, by the Japanese fleet under the command of Admiral Togo.

Korea Figures In Background.

One hundred years after Trafalgar, Togo had won a victory as complete and decisive, by sweeping Russian power from the Eastern seas. Russia refused to pay an indemnity, but agreed to recognize Japan's supremacy in Korea; to hand over to Japan the lease of the Liaotung Peninsula and the South Manchuria Railway with the mining and other rights pertaining to it, and to cede to her the southern half of Saghalien. But Japan has never forgotten that the bones of 100,000 of her brave soldiers lay on Manchurian (now Manchukuoan) soil after that war.

During the war with Russia, Japan received aid from a bloodthirsty Manchurian bandit named Chang Tso-lin. Chang rose to power in Manchuria, and in 1924 marched his troops south of the Great Wall into Peiping (Peking), establishing himself there as ruler of all northern China. The illiterate son of a coolie, he lived in great style in Peiping.

Gen. Chang Kept Harem.

He kept a harem, gave banquets at which the guests were served with cups of warm tiger's blood, and chopped off heads as an after-dinner amusement. Chang played the Japanese game, but was never trustworthy. In 1928, the armies of the Kuomintang (Chinese nationalist party) drove him back into Manchuria. Chan Tso-lin left Peiping on June 3, 1928, for Mukden, but was killed the next day when his train was wrecked by an explosion just outside the city at the spot where the Peiping-Mukden Railway passes underneath the bridge over which runs the lines of the South Manchuria Railway. This bridge was patrolled by Japanese guards at the time, hence it appears that the dynamiting was done with Japanese connivance.

Chang Tso-lin was succeeded by his son, Chang Hsueh-liang, a frail young man whose debauchery had sapped much of his strength, and whose brain was clouded by opium. Sharing many of the national aspirations of the younger generation, and angry with the Japanese whom he held responsible for killing his father, young Chang became a Chauvinist. His relations with the Kuomintang and with Nanking became closer and, in December, 1928, six months after the death of his father, he declared his allegiance to the Kuomintang government of Chiang Kai-shek, leader of the nationalist government at Nanking, China.

Young Chang Twitted Tokyo.

Young Chang immediately set out to embarrass Japanese residents and business men in Manchuria. He nullified, in effect, the treaty right of Japanese to own land, imposing illegal taxes, harassed Japanese with passport difficulties, and built railways, in an effort to drain away the trade of the South Manchuria Railway.

Japanese investments of more than $300,000,000 in the South Manchuria Railway and other parts of Manchuria were in danger. Then came the killing of Capt. Nakamura, a Japanese army officer, in an out-of-the-way region in Manchuria during the mid-summer of 1931. Some 300 grievances had been piled up against Chang, and shortly after the killing of Capt. Nakamura, the feeling between the Japanese and Chinese forces became tense. Then occurred the incident that cost China Manchuria.

According to the Japanese version as related to the Lytton Commission, Lieut. Kawamoto, with six Japanese soldiers under his command, was on patrol duty on the night of September 18, 1931, practising defense exercises along the track of the South Manchuria Railway to the north of Mukden. They heard an explosion and ran back, and after going about 200 yards, discovered that 31 inches of rail had been blown away at the point of junction of two rails.

At the moment of the explosion the south-bound train from Changchun was heard approaching. The train passed over the site of the explosion at full speed and continued to Mukden, where it arrived punctually at 10:30 p. m. There may have been an explosion, but certainly no train could pass over a gap of 31 inches without being derailed and ditched. This "incident" that never happened served as a pretext for the Japanese to take further military action in Manchuria, which they did without delay.

The following morning, Saturday, September 19, the population of Mukden awoke to find the city, together with the $100,000,000 arsenal, in the hands of Japanese troops. About a year later, the Japanese defeated General Ma, the only Chinese general to offer resistance.

On February 18, 1932, Japan proclaimed the three provinces of Manchuria, the independent state of Manchukuo. Early in 1933, the Japanese forced the Chinese army out of Jehol and added that province to Manchukuo. Henry Pu-yi, former Manchu "boy emperor" of China, ascended the throne and became Kang Teh ("Tranquility Virtue"), the first emperor of Manchukuo. But, he is an emperor in name only, having no more power than King Victor Emmanuel of Italy. The Japanese military rule Manchukuo and take orders only from the "Son of Heaven," who sits on the Japanese throne in Tokyo.

What is Japan's real interest in Manchukuo, and why did she spill blood and pour out treasure to bring it under her control? Of course, her large investments required protection, but did she desire it for Japanese colonization to take care of her surplus population, or to gain control of its agricultural and mineral resources, or both? In order to uncover Japan's real purpose in creating Manchukuo as an independent state, it is not necessary to dig very deep.

She Is Strengthening Arm Against Russia

Not the Iron and Coal of North China, but a Commanding Position for a Coming Struggle Seems Objective.

Manchukuo is not a suitable region for Japanese colonization on a large scale. The climate is much colder than in Japan, and farmers and coolies from the provinces of northern China have in the last few decades taken possession of the soil. The majority of Japanese settlers are business men, officials and salaried employes, who have come to manage large investments and to develop enterprises for the utilization of natural resources.

Rice, which is "bread" to the Japanese, is not grown in Manchukuo. Kaoliang (pronounced "gowliang"), a type of sorghum that grows to a height of about eight feet, produces a coarse grain that is eaten as a pancake by the Manchukuoan-Chinese and Korean. The Manchukuoan-Chinese underlive the Japanese and the Korean underlives both. Since less than 800,000 Japanese live outside Japan, colonization can hardly be the motive behind Japan's move in Manchukuo.

Shale Process Very Expensive.

The Fushan coal mine, owned by the South Manchurian Railway, is the largest open-cut coal mine in the world. Its coal can be mined cheaply, and undersells Japanese coal mines in Japan. However, it is of poor coking quality, hence of little value in smelting iron. Japan could get all the coal she wanted from Manchukuo before her occupation of that State, so it is clearly evident she did not have to go there to get it. Oil is extracted from shale from this same mine.

It is a very expensive process and the large plant built for this purpose, if running at full capacity, would supply only about 10 or 12 per cent of Japan's requirements. The iron resources of Manchukuo are sufficient for Japan's needs for hundreds of years to come, yet Japan imports the greater part of her requirements of this commodity from far-distant countries.

Manchukuoan ore is extremely low grade, and has a high silicon content, hence its reduction to pig iron is a costly operation. For this reason pig iron made from the rich ore of India can be hauled over several thousand miles of ocean and seas and be delivered in Japan at a cheaper figure. The Anshan Iron Works in Manchukuo runs at a loss, but when "military necessity" is involved, cost becomes a secondary consideration.

Coal Deposits Not an Element.

Now that it has been shown that Manchukuoan iron and coal are too expensive to interest anyboy except the military, what is the real purpose behind Japan's activities in Manchukuo? The answer is simple. Manchukuo is Japan's foothold on the continent—the key to military control of the Far East. It spreads out like a leaf, forming a buffer between three great nations, China, Japan and Russia. With its excellent railway system Japan can move troops and strike Russia in the north and east, China in the south and southwest, and Inner and Outer Mongolia in the west.

The present situation in China has forced the Italo-Ethiopian War off page one. A movement is under way to turn five rich provinces of northern China with a population of 30,000,000 Chinese into an independent state like Manchukuo, with a puppet-emperor on the throne.

This is just another step in plans formulated years ago toward Japanese domination of all eastern Asia. After this new state is set up Japan will find some excuse to send her armies into Inner and Outer Mongolia. With Manchukuo, the new state of northern China now in the process of creation, and Inner and Outer Mongolia under Japanese control the time will be ripe for Japan to "gang up" with Germany against Russia. Should they do so Russia will be in a bad way, literally between two paws of a powerful pair of pincers, Japan closing in from the east, and Germany from the west.

Tanaka's Notes Of 1927 Quoted.

In General Tanaka's famous "Memorial of 1927," claimed by the Japanese to be a forgery, there appears these passages ". . . Japan cannot remove the difficulties in Eastern Asia unless she adopts a policy of 'Blood and Iron' . . . in the future if we want to control China we must first crush the United States . . . but in order to conquer China we must first conquer Manchuria and Mongolia." And elsewhere in this same "Memorial," we read: "Manchuria and Mongolia are the Belgium of the Far East. In the Great War, Belgium was the battlefield. In our wars with Russia and the United States, we must also make Manchuria and Mongolia suffer the ravages."

Upton Close (Josef Washington Hall), an authority on Far Eastern affairs, commented on the "Tanaka Memorial" as follows: "The thing that matters about the Tanaka Memorial is that since September 18, 1931, Japan has been consistently and relentlessly carrying out the program outlined therein; and as long or as often as she is ruled by the group committed to that program unto death, she will continue to relentlessly carry it out. To one who knows the inwardness of Japan, the 'Memorial' is superfluous. To those judging Japan as they would another nation it may provide fundamental enlightenment."

Huge Budget For the Army.

On November 30 the Japanese cabinet approved the largest army and navy appropriations in the history of the empire, constituting 46.8 per cent of the total estimated expenditures for the coming fiscal year. During the budget debates Admiral Osumi, minister of the navy, and Gen. Yoshiyuki, minister of war, cited Japan's relations with America, China and Soviet Russia as reasons why larger defense appropriations should be made.

The United States is a signatory of the Nine-Power Treaty and the Kellogg-Briand pact. It is an established principle of the United States to respect the sanctity of a solemn obligation, and not consider a treaty as a mere collection of autographs. Therefore, Japan has no reason to fear us as an "aggressor" Nation.

We trust, as do other peace-loving nations of the world, that the "Tanaka Memorial" will be proved a forgery and that the plains of Mongolia, cradle of the human race, may not also become its supreme burial ground.

Liquor Contest Of Churchmen Gathers Force

Philadelphia, (U.P.)—The Methodist Episcopal Church has not ceased its fight against liquor in America.

Ample proof of that was given by D. Stewart Patterson, an associate secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in an address here.

Striking at the "increasing widespread drinking of liquor with its resultant tragedies and accidents," Patterson said that the issue is no longer a "question of one's sentiment, wet or dry, but a question of one's safety."

Patterson declared that "repeal has proven an utter farce and a complete failure as far as settling the liquor problem. Not one promise made by the opponents of prohibition has been fulfilled."

Asserting that "the widespread drinking" is "actually endangering the safety of people all across the Nation," Patterson further charged:

"The present plan of sale is infinitely worse than it was in prohibition days when the legalized saloon existed. In Washington-D. C., there are approximately five times as many places of sale as there were in legal saloon days. This is typical across the country.

"The bulk of advertising is aimed at women and young people. There is a determined drive to make these two groups 'drink conscious' and then drink consumers.

"People must put sentiment, wet or dry, aside and must see that the safety of their homes and their children is at stake. There must be a sane, sensible facing of facts. The figures for automobile fatalities and highway accident are appalling. They have been increasing monthly.

"There is no longer any doubt as to the intentions of the organized liquor traffic. Their objective is 'America Drunk.'

"The increase in deaths and accidents caused by drunken driving is menacing every community. It seemingly has taken tragedy to awaken many people to the dangers of the reestablished liquor trade."

News Quiz of the Week

By Elmo C. Wilson.

Here is the first news quiz prepared by a university faculty member as a memory test for newspaper readers. In the first two sections one of the statements preceded by a letter of the alphabet tells why one of the men named was in the news recently. To work this part of the quiz place in the brackets after the names the letters of the statement which you think tells why these persons were in the news. In the third section each statement is followed by five possible answers. Pick out the one which you think is correct and place the letter which precedes it in the brackets at the end. The correct answers are given below. Another test will appear next Sunday.

King of Greece Likely to Take $100,000 Pay

Athens (U.P.)—Calculating what would be owing to King George II of Greece in back pay, if he were to claim it, would be a job for higher mathematicians.

The Greek drachma was on a gold basis when the King left 12 years ago, but was depreciated (about 60 to the dollar, or 1.8 cents). Since then it has been cut twice, so that it is now equal to 1 cent U. S.

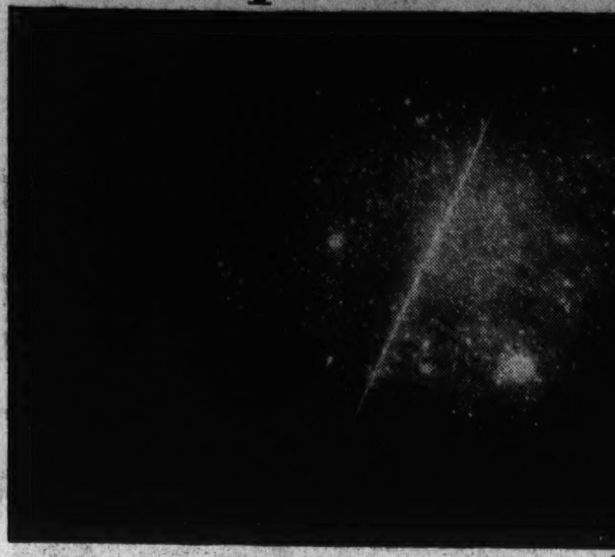
But the constitution of 1911, restored after the Republican coup d'etat, calls for payment of the royal civil list in gold drachmas, and technically, the King would have the right to claim this sum. It amounted to 1,250,000 gold drachmas annually.

King George has been quoted as saying he would be satisfied with about $100,000 annually, and that he will not claim his back pay. But some pessimistic taxpayers point to the lean years of his long exile, at least partially financed by loans to the royal family, and gloomily talk of impatient creditors. They take their pencils and figure:

One and a quarter million gold drachmas under the royalist constitution. Multiply by 12 years exile—15,000,000 gold drachmas. At 35 (present ratio of paper drachmas to the old gold drachma)—525,000,000 paper drachmas, or $5,250,000. That, say the pessimists, is what King George would have the right to claim under the 1911 constitution, since he never has abdicated the throne. That does not include possible claims of indemnification for the lands and estates which have been confiscated, which some estimate would amount to as much again.

Further, the old royal salary calculated in paper drachmas today would amount to 43,650,000 ($436,500). That would be virtually impossible for Greece to produce in her present financial plight. It is likely that a compromise agreement on a much lower sum will be reached.

Stratosphere Data Bolster the Theory That Meteors Transport Life



The remarkable photograph of a meteor (above), taken as it flashed across the southern sky between the constellations Taurus and Perseus, was made at the Oak Ridge Station of the Harvard College Observatory.

Savants of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, Dr. E. P. Henderson (standing) and B. O. Reberholt, are making casts of two meteorites which recently fell from the skies near Farmville, N. C. One weighed 111 pounds, the other 12 pounds.

This meteor crater, situated 20 miles due west of Winslow, Ariz., is 600 feet deep and 400 feet in diameter. The falling fragment of the heavens took care to carve itself a giant nesting place in the desert sands far from any city.

Recent Flight Traps Bacteria 14 Miles Up

Scientist Holds Meteors Bear Organisms Through Inter-Stellar Spaces to Populate New Worlds.

By Harry Goldsmith.

Meteors, roaring through the upper strata of the earth's atmosphere, may be interplanetary space ships taking on cargoes of living organisms and whizzing them off to some far-away planet where as a result of evolutionary processes, a new world of living beings is born.

Thus, on some other "earths" beyond the range of man's most powerful telescopes may exist living beings, offspring of some earthly "germ," perhaps far different from humans in appearance but yet, like us, afflicted with wars and depressions, strugglnig with new deals, trumping their partner's aces, worrying about their niblick shots and forehand drives—and "all the ills that flesh is heir to."

That life may be distributed from the earth out into space and to some other planet by meteors is the startling suggestion recently made by J. C. T. Uphof, of the department of biology, Rollins College, Fla.

Perhaps at first blush it may seem a bit of fantastic philosophizing. Yet Mr. Uphof's amazing conception, now stirring scientific circles, is based upon careful consideration of data collected by scientists in recent years concerning the habits of meteors and their chemical composition; concerning the resistance of certain micro-organisms, such as bacteria, to extremes of heat, cold and drought that they may encounter during an interplanetary journey, and most of all concerning the appearance of various organisms in the upper layers of the earth's atmosphere.

Meteors Arrive Daily By the Millions.

From such searchings enough is now known about these organisms to make it seem quite possible for meteors whizzing through the super-stratosphere to take up those that are caught in their path and carry them into space to another world, still alive.

"Considering the frequent occurrence of meteors passing through our atmosphere (15,000,000 to 20,000,000 every 24 hours), the appearance of micro-organisms in the upper air, and the remarkable resistance of certain microbes toward certain extremes like cold, heat and drought, brought to my mind that a distribution of life through various parts of the universe is by no means an impossibility and can be better demonstrated, or at least better proposed at the present, than 40 or 50 years ago," declared Uphof.

Philosophers have long wondered whether life may exist on some other world bodies than our own. The discovery of "canals" on the planet Mars led to much fantastic speculation along these lines. Some scientists have gone so far as to answer the question "How did life originate on this globe?" by explaining that it came from another world.

They theorize that our earth may have been originally populated through the help of meteors, carrying micro-organisms from other worlds; that these transplanted bits of life, after having reached the earth's surface and its damp atmosphere, were able to reproduce themselves; that during the billions of years these organisms, through the shaping and molding forces of evolution, gave rise to the present forms of plant and animal life—to the fish of the sea, the birds of the air, to plants, to animals and to man—to you and me.

Odd gadgets, dubbed "sky hooks" and "spore catchers," carried on planes and stratosphere gondolas, have snatched the evidence from the thin air miles above the earth. In fact, the latest findings which may show that life exists on other planets is contributed by Capts. Stevens' and Anderson's recent 14-mile jaunt into the stratosphere. One object of their unprecedented ascent was to find if minute forms of life, such as spores, live at a high altitude and intense cold.

Aloft with them went "spore catchers" and Fred C. Meiers, Department of Agriculture scientist and spore catcher designer, has just concluded a study of the stratosphere "catch" that life does exist in the rare cold airs..

Minute forms of life can exist under conditions which would kill man instantly. Unlike sensitive humans, they need no gondola or oxygen tanks to protect them.

Meier's study shows that the spores caught by Capts. Stevens and Anderson were unaffected by temperatures of 65 degrees below zero Fahrenheit and by air so thin and rare that a man would die in a moment or two gasping for breath. The germ-lethal ultraviolet rays, the ozone and the extreme dryness of 14 miles up did not seem to destroy the vitality of the spores at all.

If spores can live under such conditions, scientists logically ask if they can not live under the only slightly more severe conditions of ethereal space 100 or 1,000 miles outward from the earth—where meteors dash with the speed of a thousand express trains.

When Col. Charles A. Lindbergh made his 20,000-mile epic flight from the Arctic to South America, a "sky hook" on his plane snared, particularly in the rarefied and congealing atmosphere of the Arctic sky, many kinds of spores and micro-organisms, a great number of which were previously unknown to science.

Theory Was Advanced Fifty Years Ago.

The idea that meteors may transport life throughout the interplanetary spaces was proposed some 50 years ago by the scientist Von Helmholtz, to whom we owe much knowledge concerning light and sound, and who gave to the "eye doctor" the ophthalmoscope. In 1884, writing "Concerning the Origin of the Planetary Systems," he makes a statement to this effect:

Who can say whether these bodies (meaning meteors) which swarm everywhere throughout the space of the universe do not also scatter the seeds of Life? Thus, perhaps, somewhere a new "world-body" becomes the home of a living creature. And we might even consider this new life related to our own in origin except for deviating forms resulting from its adaptation to the conditions of its new habitat.

Uphof looks at it from a different angle. His speculations concerns the possibility of the earth's serving as the distribution center of life to other planets. He sets out to prove that it is by no means beyond a possibility for metors to pick up microbes floating in the outer stratosphere and to transplant them to some other world.

"In fact," he states, "when once taken up by a meteor, the organisms are already on another world-body. Whether it is large or small is but a relative idea. It is, of course, of greater importance whether life will perpetuate itself."

Uphof calls attention to experiments which show that when certain bacteria meet with hard times of drought, cold or heat, they put on a coat of armor which tides them over the adverse conditions. In this insulated stage, referred to as the spore stage, the bacteria are mighty hard to "bump off." In one experiment, the spores of anthrax bacilli, an organism which has been responsible for more deaths among domestic animals than any other germ, have been kept in a dry place for 10 years, only to start growing again with all the old-time virulence when placed in a suitable environment.

Some Spores Resist Extreme Dryness.

The spores, or resting cells as they are called, of the green and blue algae, of which sea weed is a member, have remarkable resistance to drought. Such drought-resistant organisms as these could well withstand the bone-dryness of interspaces where rain never falls.

Some bacteria and germs can also quickly adapt themselves to high temperatures. That's why doctors must use steam sterilizers for their instruments and why mother's have to boil babies' bottles. There are so-called "thermophilous"—that is

London Zoo Has Jungle Kindergarten

Lion Cubs and Boys and Girls Romp There Together.

By Lillian Zahn.

The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

Thus prophesied Isaiah many centuries ago. If this prophesy has not yet been realized in the world at large, at least a good beginning was made just recently at the London zoo, where just such a picture presents itself every day in the newly-opened Pets Corner. Here the offspring of zoo inmates together with a number of tame adult animals are permitted to run around loosely, without the restriction of bars or cages. They can frolic and play with each other—or with the human children who are invited to come into this "animal-kindergarten" specifically for that purpose,

Huxley Credited With Innovation.

This sensational innovation in the history of zoos, bringing Isaiah's millenium to this world, at least in part, is the creation of Prof. Julian Huxley, who was recently appointed director of the London Zoo. A grandson of Darwin's colleague, Thomas F. Huxley, and the brother of Aldous Huxley (who wrote among other things the satirical novel, "Point Counterpoint"), the new warden of the zoological gardens long ago became famous for his imaginative theories.

And that he should entertain such radical ideas as placing different species of animals, both tame and wild, in one compartment and then invite children to play with lions and pythons, was no surprise. It was almost expected of him. This lanky aristocrat, who became a popular idol in the days when he was honorary lecturer in experimental zoology in Kings College, began to put his idealistic principles into action soon after his zoo appointment.

He felt sorry for the zoo inmates who were destined to such a dreary life of boredom behind two-by-four cages; he was appalled by the ranking ignorance of animal life on the part of London's school children. How to kill two birds with one stone? Bring the children and the animals together for purposes of play, and, presto, you have laughter and sunshine in the somber grounds of the zoo and you instill a love for wild and tame animal life on the part of London's future citizenry.

Without any explanations, without consulting a single psychologist, without giving a hoot to the skeptics, he set out to carry out his plans, and within a few months after his appointment up came a new wing at the London Zoo, known as the Pets Corner—an unbarred, cageless kindergarten. Then he sent out an open invitation to London's school and pre-school children to come in and borrow the animals for a few hours' play.

Murmurs began to spread from one end of London to the other. Wouldn't the animals in the new "Noah's Ark" pounce upon one another, the wild ones devouring the tame ones; and as for little boys and girls playing with lions and pythons, why, that was unheard of in the history of civilization. But all doubts and evil rumors were dispelled on the official opening day—the most exciting premeditated event in the history of the zoo and, for that matter, any zoo.

Grown-ups Come With Children.

On that auspicious occasion, widely advertised by Prof. Huxley, mobs of London children, together with their aunts and uncles and mammas and papas and grandmas and grandpas, assembled in front of the low fence that separated them from the Pets Corner, to witness for themselves how the different species would react to one another.

Soon Prof. Huxley made his appearance in the "arena" as master of ceremonies. He introduced the would-be pets one by one. There was Laura, the parrot; Peter, the chimp; Percy, the penguin; June, the mammoth century-old turtle who had just entered her second childhood; Peter, the python; Niger, the white calf; Iris, the springing Shetland pony; George, the lion cub; Aga, the camel; Pedro, the Llma, and a string of other tame zoo inmates not so young in years but kind in disposition.

The animals behaved in the most mannerly fashion. In fact they were so shy that they hardly moved. Perhaps they were stage-struck at the sight of so many spectators. But it was Peter the chimp, the king of the monkey house, who was destined to win the laurels for unmannerliness.

Prof. Huxley was in the process of delivering the opening oration. Percy the penguin stood by in proud and earnest manner, watching the proceedings as if they concerned him and him only, while Laura the parrot appeared as if she were determined to interrupt Prof. Huxley's speech with her pet expression, "Silence please." Finally, she could not resist her temptation to interrupt the professor. Peter the chimp seemed most annoyed at the sight of such rude manners. Suddenly, in the midst of Prof. Huxley's most dramatic words, Peter gave Laura a punch in the eye. The large audience, unmindful of the professor's words, broke out into an explosion of laughter. Whereupon Laura retaliated by lunging her beak into the flat nose of the chimp. Prof. Huxley could restrain himself no longer, and he, too, joined in the outburst of laughter. The enraged Peter now set out for the great "knockout" and Laura's beautiful feathers flew in all directions. Pretty soon it looked mighty bad for Laura who could barely support herself on her legs. She was saved the final embarrassment by being removed in time to the shelter house, away from the fierce attacks of Peter. Peter, the victor, was carried off pick-aback to be given a good brushing. Gales of laughter swept the grounds.

A moment later Percy the penguin was awakened from his revery. His first move was to show off his prowess. He produced a small fish from no one knows where and began to balance it on top of his beak. Soon his appetite got the best of his showmanship and he swallowed the fish like a "good little boy." Two little girls, charmed by his antics, released themselves from their grandmother's hold and stepped into the "arena" to adopt Percy as their pet. He proved a very willing pet indeed. He proferred his stretch-out fins to his admirers and permitted them to lead him for a dignified stroll. He followed them like a faithful dog.

White Calf Joins Frolic.

Suddenly Niger, the white calf, caught the spirit of frolic. He sprang back and forth in his childish glee. One little boy, unable to restrain himself longer, jumped in and began to chase after Niger. After having caught him, he fondled him and caressed him as if he were a teddy bear.

By this time George, the lion cub, began to feel at home. He romped around like a kitten. Before he knew what it was all about a little boy was hugging him and patting his silken fur. Two little girls, envious of the boy's prize, ran over to him, offering to share the pet, but the little boy was selfish. He ran off into the far corner of the kindergarter to enjoy the cub by himself.

Peter the chimp was now back in the fold, washed, scrubbed and chastened. The two little girls who were denied the pleasure of the lion cub leveled their attention on Peter. They produced all sorts of tidbits from their pockets and offered them to Peter, who reveled in his gluttony. In return he licked them and hugged them and kissed them, not exactly to the keen delight of the little girls.

'Pets' Corner' Attracts Many Animal Devotees.

There was no end to the thrills to be experienced. June, the mammoth turtle, was just beginning to emerge her head from her enormous shell which sported a hand-painted sign on its front tip, saying, "This end bites." She began to stride leisurely about. The mirth and expressions of joy were contagious. She could not resist them. A 5-year-old girl, releasing her father's hand, jumped in and parked herself on top of the turtle, on the side oppositte to the "bite" sign. Whereupon she was treated to a free ride by the obliging June.

Python Makes Biggest Hit.

But the greatest sensation of the day was produced by Peter the python. He was the last to participate in the fiesta. For the longest time he lay limply on the ground, coiled in a knot. He was oblivious to the snuffs and punches reigned upon him by the other animals who happened to bump into him or who simply were curious to find out what he was like. All of a sudden he stretched himself out to his full length of six feet. At first there was a scurry away from him. The animals and children alike feared that he would engulf them in his death-dealing coils. But he was only a baby, and he only wanted someone to play with.

Finally one dauntless little boy took pity on him and offered his body for coiling purposes. Peter was in ecstacy. He simply refused to uncoil himself, and the little boy seemed to enjoy the proceedings no less. He walked up and down the kindergarten, sporting his prize coil to the almost horrified spectators. When he grew tired of his excess weight, a keeper helped him to free himself of his burden. And Peter resumed his knot.

Shetland Pony Popular Pet.

Iris, the springing Shetland pony, was another popular number, only too many little boys claimed her for a pet. And so was the baby alligator who passed through so many little hands that he was well nigh exhausted by the time the ceremonies were over.

That day Prof. Huxley's speech was never finished, because his wards stole the show. And when closing time came, the children were reluctant to leave their pets for a night's rest. Some of them had to be literally torn away from the Pets Corner; others were coaxed away with the promise that the next day they could come back and reclaim their pets. And that evening when Prof. Huxley was driving home, he must have chuckled to himself that at least once he did not need to publish a treatise on that afternoon's experiment.

And ever since that auspicious opening day the pets corner has been drawing record crowds. Reservations have to be put in far in advance in order to borrow a particular animal for an afternoon's play. And ever since that day Prof. Huxley has been constantly adding new pets to his pets corner. So popular indeed has the corner become, especially during holidays, that the ingenious warden of the London Zoo has been obliged to undertake the construction of still another wing to accommodate the great numbers of children who besiege him with requests for this or that animal. Lately he has introduced domesticated animals, such as pigs and fowl, into the "ark," so that the child visitors might learn a bit about farm life.

At night the Pets Corner is deserted. The animals are returned each to its individual shelter. Some of the babies are given back to their respective mothers. All is quiet. Peace has descended on the zoo kingdom!

"Silence please," chirps Laura the parrot.

Strange Star Acts Like Twins, Puzzled Astronomer Reports

Mount Wilson Observatory Savant Studies Queer Conduct of Giant Red Sun That Increases and Decreases Its Light.

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 7 (AP).—The unaccountable actions of R Acquarii, leading to speculation that this strange star (astronomical, not cinematical), may be leading a double life, engaged the attention today of Dr. Paul W. Merrill, astronomer.

Several lines usually found only in gaseous nebulae have been discovered in recent years in the spectrum of the huge star, Dr. Merrill said, in commenting on his recently published investigation. He is an astronomer at the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson Observatory.

"I found that as the spectrum of the red variable grew weaker, there appeared other lines which should not have been there," he explained. "It was like looking at a litter of pigs and suddenly discovering a puppy among them.

"There must be some explanation and one that suggested itself was that R Acquarii had a 'companion,' was, in fact, two stars. But if there are two stars, they are so close together we have been unable to single them out with the 100-inch telescope."

R Acquarii was discovered as a red variable star more than a century ago, Dr. Merrill said. Estimated to have a diameter 200 times that of the sun, it increases its brilliance 100-fold and then returns to its original brilliance every 387 days.

Not only was the spectrum of the red variable star unusual, Dr. Merrill said, but photographs have revealed remarkable features in the space near it.

"A faint, but very great lens-shaped nebulosity reaching out an enormous distance on either side of it was discovered by Dr. C. D. Lampland at Lowell Observatory. Later I found a tiny, nebular disk which varies in brightness closely surrounding it.

"If R Acquarii is a binary, or double star, it is barely possible the two components may get far enough apart in 20 years or so that astronomers will be able to single them out with a telescope. But just now there is no entirely satisfactory explanation for the star's oddities."

New Bone Technique Conquers Lameness

After-Effects of Infantile Paralysis Remedied by Leg-Stretching Process Perfected in New York Hospital.

By Frank Zala.

Bones can be stretched and legs lengthened to avoid the tragic aftermath of infantile paralysis and other diseases which shorten a single limb and thus leave the victim with a limp and, as a result of the limp, a spinal curvature. The leg-stretching process, as perfected and used at the Hospital for Joint Diseases in New York City, has resulted in normalizing the gait and the leg length of 40 patients.

Ever since infantile paralysis, tuberculosis of the bone and injuries to the growth center for the lower extremities have afflicted the human race surgeons have sought for a method to eradicate these tragedies. Now the method in use at the hospital has been perfected, at least to a degree where the operation and the post-operative stretching technique insure a minimum of risk and a maximum of success.

The method includes actually sawing the leg bone, severing it with a more or less Z-shaped cut, inserting four wires through the bone, and actually pulling apart the cut sectors of bone so that indolent Mother Nature, who performs this miracle only when she has been given a cue, can fill up the space with new, strong bone growth. What is even more amazing is that the entire process is comparatively painless.

Your correspondent interviewed a girl of 20 whose leg, shortened 2½ inches by infantile paralysis, is being stretched. The patient, a cheerful little person, was quite comfortable in her bed, her leg propped up in the compact unit which comprises the stretching apparatus, and did not seem at all dismayed by the spectacle of her leg with four piano wires inserted in it.

"There was some pain during the first few days," she smiled. "But it really isn't anything compared with what I thought it would be. And it's worth it to be able to walk straight again. Now it doesn't hurt at all."

Patient Feels Quite Content.

While she cannot do much moving about during the period her leg is in the stretching apparatus, the patient is perfectly comfortable, not canopied by the great, clumsy depressing affair of overhead weights and gadgets that characterized the old methods of attempting such results. We left her calmly reading a magazine while her leg was growing a few more inches for itself. In a few weeks the patient will be walking about, her leg encased in a plaster cast including a walking brace, and not many weeks after that first walk, she will be at home, able to walk and run and dance with her friends. In all probability the newly-legthened leg will then be stronger than ever before.

Let us go back to the history of this modern miracle which is now available in this hospital and in other such centers throughout the country.

Leg-stretching as a technique is not new. It has been tried, experimented with, and improved over a period of years. But until 1927, when surgeons of the Hospital for Joint Diseases perfected the new method now in use there, there were several disadvantages which made the entire process rather risky and not precisely certain of success.

The severed bones, under the old method, could not be kept in perfect alignment during the stretching period. Obviously, both portions of the cut bone must be kept absolutely straight, if the new bone growth is to accomplish the desired effect and if the longer leg is to be straight and strong. Delayed union, failure or partial failure of the bones to unit, was another point that spelled danger in the old procedure. That danger has not been completely wiped out, even now, but it is reduced to a minimum. The chances of infection were always present, as they are in any operation, but, with reasonably expert care, there is no excessive fear on this score.

The old attempts at leg-stretching used, instead of the thin taut wire, heavy pegs which, by their size and inadequacy, increased the chances of infection.

The use of the thin wires, attached to the new apparatus, makes it possible to maintain the severed bones in perfect alignment.

Old Technique Much Riskier.

The first step in the entire process is the operation. The surgeon who performs it at the hospital named requires only 5 minutes in all to complete the various steps. Not only must the bone be actually sawed apart, but all the restricting tissue surrounding the bone, the muscles and the fascia, the thin elastic casing around the muscles, must be cut so that the muscles can grow apace with the bone. The length of the cut is more than the length to be added, so that the two portions of bone never entirely lose contact with each other.

Severing the casing around the muscles is a feature of the new technique. When this was not done, patents suffered intense pain during the leg-stretching period as the fascia is extremely resistant. The heel cord, another highly resistant tissue, is also severed.

Before the cuts, in bone and muscle and muscle casing, are made, the wires are inserted, in four places. Two wires generally are run through the bone near the knee, one near the ankle and one, another feature of the perfected method, in the heel.

The wires run horizontally and each end of each wire is attached to a screw device so that the wire is taut. The tension thus exerted holds the severed bones exactly in position so that there can be no displacement, no buckling of the now separated bones.

For approximately four weeks the leg is kept in this apparatus, which has a cradle-like arrangement under the leg to hold it comfortably and scientifically in position. Each day the bones are pulled apart almost or about ⅛ of an inch. The two wires inserted near the knee are so attached to the de-

Irresponsible Propaganda.

In the heat of argument individuals often make statements that are unfair, misleading or without foundation of fact. But a more careful standard in political controversies is to be expected from the United States Army and Navy. It is regrettable that the President has found it necessary to apologize for an alleged memorandum from the Naval Intelligence Bureau and to warn the two military departments against commenting adversely upon the patriotism of civilian organizations.

To stigmatize the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America as an agency giving aid and comfort to communism is using very reckless language. Even if that accusation were true, however, it would not be the business of the Naval Intelligence Bureau to proclaim it. Neither this nor any other bureau in the military establishment has been assigned the task of purging civilian organizations or setting them standards in behaviorism.

In the discussion of national defense needs it is inevitable that the opinions of Army and Navy officers will sometimes clash with those of civilian groups. So far as these discussions are kept on a high plane of fact and theory differing views are a healthy contribution to the lawmaking process. But epithets and recriminations merely obscure the real issues, and they tend to undermine that faith in the scientific and dispassionate judgment of its military advisers which is essential in a democracy.

Resort to arbitrary denunciation is always especially undesirable when practiced by a governmental agency. The President's implied reprimand to the Naval Intelligence Bureau ought to be sufficient to keep future statements from official sources entirely free from irresponsible propaganda.

"At Our Own Risk."

To brighten the news from Ethiopia reporting the Italian bombing of an American hospital, comes an announcement from Takoma Park. An official at the headquarters of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, which operates the hospital in question, in commenting on the incident declared, "We stayed there at our own risk."

In other words, the medical missionaries and the church expect no official sympathy, still less any demands for explanations or redress, from the United States Government. Yet there is nothing in the present neutrality act which denies these non-combatants the protection supposed to be afforded by the Red Cross and their national flag.

If it were only certain that the entire Nation could take as detached an attitude when personally affected by the consequences of modern warfare, and could be equally Christian in reaction toward barbarian acts, the chances of effective neutrality as an effective national policy would be stronger.

Politics And The Franc.

The decisive vote of confidence given the Laval government on the question of disarming semi-military organizations of both right and left wing groups was followed by a pronounced rise in government bonds and in franc quotations.

It has long been recognized that the franc reflects with extreme sensitiveness the effect of political disorders which give rise to fears that France may follow the example of Germany and Italy and repudiate the parliamentary system of government. Consequently, if the Chamber of Deputies had refused at this critical juncture to support Laval in his campaign to suppress dissident elements threatening the existence of representative institutions, the outlook for national credit would indeed have been dark.

If economic and financial factors alone determined the fate of a currency, there would be little doubt about the future stability of the franc and the ability of Laval to carry through a deflationary retrenchment program designed to avert further devaluation. Despite huge gold losses, France still holds the second largest gold reserve in the world. Moreover, current gold losses have resulted from a capital flight occasioned solely by political fears.

Manifestations of confidence in the efficacy of parliamentary government are therefore accepted as an indorsement of a firmly financial policy not beyond the capacity of this strong nation to sustain. Undoubtedly difficulties lie ahead for the French government in its attempt to balance the budget and reduce domestic living costs. But for the present it has been immeasurably strengthened in its fight to preserve a stable currency.

Mussolini Makes A Point.

One point in Mussolini's defiant speech to his hand-picked Chamber of Deputies deserves elaboration. It is his assertion yesterday that sanctions have never been attempted before and "probably never will be tried again."

There can be no question about the first part of the statement, and the carefully fanned Italian irritation over being singled out as the victim of this "experiment" is entirely natural. But Mussolini, who has shattered so many traditions and blazed new trails in so many directions, should be the first to recognize that the mere novelty of an enterprise does not in itself justify condemnation.

Moreover many close students of world history have long anticipated that a general alignment of nations against a treaty violator would sooner or later come about. This was first foreshadowed in the general lineup against Germany, greatly assisted by the mere appearance of unprovoked aggression on the part of that nation. It was brought closer by the League's indictment of the Japanese conquest of Manchuria, in which the aggressor was condemned without sentence being passed. As a logical progression now comes the practical effort to apply pressure to Italy, made more inevitable by that nation's utterly contemptuous attitude toward even the form of its solemn international engagement.

So it results from normal and predictable development that Italy should be the first victim of the sanctionist policy. And, as her leader says, it is also probable that she will be the last. If the policy of sanctions succeeds it is highly unlikely that Germany or any other great power will in the future run the risk of undergoing similar penalties. Japan, most obviously, is trying to get all she can now just because the game of grabbing may have very definite penalties attached to it in the future. The outlawry of war doctrine is pure eyewash until it carries that risk for the transgressor which alone gives law reality. And nations with a feudal psychology will quiet down—as did the feudal barons—as soon as they are made to realize that the welfare of society demands a wider consideration than that of their own convenience.

If the collective action against Italy fails, on the other hand, it will probably be—as Mussolini suggests—a complete failure. Contractual relations between nations would be clearly defined as having no real binding authority. If a disarmament treaty were signed, everyone would regard it as a mere scrap of paper. And in that outcome the armed strength of each nation would be the only safeguard against the expansionist will of its neighbors. That is a situation, incidentally, which Italy could anticipate with rather less equanimity than many.

Il Duce has done well to emphasize the enormous importance to civilization of a clear-cut decision on the ability of society to give the structure of voluntary treaty relations some validity.

Easily Dispersed.

From the bloodless success of the Georgia National Guard in preventing the lynching of a Negro prisoner recently, the South may learn more than the ease with which a rabble can be held in check by military discipline. Local sheriff's deputies would have been helpless before the mob which gathered at Moultrie, but two companies of guardsmen changed the look of things entirely. Nor is the value of the incident lessened by the fact that the condemned murderer is scheduled to die in the electric chair this week.

The passions of a frenzied crowd can always swamp the local forces of law and order, unless the latter are prepared to show that they mean business in upholding their responsibility for community welfare. The old remedy of English law was to consider mob action as national treason, and to punish it accordingly. In parts of America municipal authorities have been too apt to forget the sound reasoning on which that definition was based.

Immediate action by State authorities, to supplement the needs of county officials, could quickly obliterate the miserable injustice of lynchings, and prove that such a crime is not condoned by the decent majority of any section. Such a positive application of States' rights would be a valuable offset to more selfish interpretations of a great political tradition.

In Sheep's Clothing.

There has been much deserved complaint, by critics, that most modern novelists are woefully ignorant of both their contemporaries and their predecessors. Now one modern novelist echoes the critical contention—with curious results. Thomas Wolfe is at pains, in the December "Bookbuyer," to prove that authors ought to read, but his own practice of the precept leaves a trifle to be desired.

"Some writing people have told me," he says, "that they read as little as possible when they are at work on a book because they fear effect of outside influences on the validity of their conception." Mr. Wolfe is not of this number. He reads while he writes, and finds refreshment in "works characterized by a certain difficulty and complexity," including "War and Peace," "Our Times," "Wilhelm Meister" and "The World Almanac." He adds, with evident disapproval: "Arnold Bennett when asked what books he read is supposed to nave answered, 'I don't read 'em, I write 'em.'"

It is a pity that Mr. Wolfe has not consulted du Maurier along with Tolstoi, Mark Sullivan, Goethe and the anonymous pundits of the almanac. Perhaps Bennett did say the epigram thus attributed to him. But du Maurier said it first. He, unlike Bennett and Wolfe, made his own humor.

Insuring Justice.

All who appreciate the significance of the Hauptmann case in the current struggle for more effective law enforcement will welcome the painstaking manner in which it is being handled by Gov. Hoffman. Instead of the executive indifference which might have been expected at this stage, the Governor is personally investigating the case, with the aid of the official machinery of detection, to remove any shadow of doubt as to the prisoner's guilt. That is eminently right and proper.

Hauptmann was convicted on circumstantial evidence. Overwhelming as that evidence against him appeared, it is the Governor's duty thoroughly to consider any new light on the case from any source whatever, and thereby completely satisfy his own mind that justice is being done. An execution is one act of government that can never be reversed. Terrible mistakes of the past are sufficient warning against carrying out the death sentence until every reasonable possibility of making an error has been eliminated.

The attitude of Gov. Hoffman shows that he is interested only in the impersonal ends of justice. And, of course, the issue at stake goes far beyond the fate of Bruno Richard Hauptmann. A mistake in this celebrated case would be a severe blow to the cause of law enforcement throughout the United States, just as surely as the scientific detective work, which originally led to Hauptmann's arrest, has been a blow to the underworld.

The Governor perhaps feels that painstaking care on his part is the more essential because of the hideous vaudeville aspects of the Flemington trial. His commendable interest in the case may have no effect on the final outcome. But it certainly will leave the State of New Jersey and the Nation with a more positive sense of justice administered in that dispassionate and scrupulous manner which is necessary to give the word its true meaning.

Merry New Year!

The Christmas tree is not yet down. In fact, it's not even up. But despite this, the magazine stands are already full of gaudy New Year covers and the date 1936 looks as comfortably ensconced as if it had been ushered in with benefit of horns and confetti. In such majority are the January issues over the December ones that the latter, with their inevitable chimney and reindeer combine, look as forlorn as a tinseled tree the day after Christmas.

The life of the magazine makeup men is hard. They have to be one month ahead of the rest of the world in the matter of holidays and seasonal material. They have to be six months ahead in fashions and advertisements. Along with plum-pudding allurements and ski costumes must be a certain amount of recognition in behalf of spring, which magazine editors always feel "can't be far behind."

Of course, planning is in the air. And it is rather cheerful to glance over sun-suits and floppy garden hats while the wind is piling the snow up outside. But, getting back to the January issue in December, we feel that this is one issue in which the shiny paper forecasters fall down. At best, it's a shilly-shally number which ventures bravely forth into the next year while loath to forego entirely the old. In it, the subject of "Choosing Christmas Cards" is back to back with "My New Year's Resolution." Santa Claus stories vie with witching-hour articles.

In other words, it's a flop any way you look at it. Nobody is thinking of New Year celebrations during the Christmas rush. And, goodness knows, in January nobody will be interested in "What to Give Father," except the bills.

You can fool some of the people all of the time, but so many others are fooling them that there's very little profit in it.

A person does his heaviest thinking in trying to arrive at logical reasons for doing as he pleases.

You can't keep both yourself and your business in a liquid condition.

The Way Of Bureaucracy.

From the Kansas City Times.

The persistent attempts to revive the discredited and invalidated NRA can be attributed simply to one thing—the desire of a bureaucracy to perpetuate itself. The situation constitutes a pointed reminder of the danger of bureaucracy, once established. It is never willing to let go, to dispose of its pay rolls and to close its doors, no matter how useless or detrimental it may become.

In this instance, not even a unanimous Supreme Court decision has served to end a bureaucracy that had become recognized as futile and hurtful in advance of the final ruling against it. After the Supreme Court had spoken the sponsors of this proposal either had the wisdom to drop it or saw the futility of trying to get it through.

But the NRA bureaucracy remained on the job. It has been busy since, although the principal evidence of its industry has pointed to labors that would mean permanent jobs for its members. So far as American business is concerned, it probably will be scantily represented at the approaching conference. It has been occupied, too, since last May, but its renewed industry and its progress have been inspired mainly by realization of at least a measure of freedom from bureaucratic control. It will hardly be returning now to ask the assistance of another NRA, desperate as that agency may be for its revival and perpetuation.

Ickes Says Congestion May Force New Deal Agencies To Leave Washington.

Five Star Edition

The Dionne quintuplets displayed no stage fright, camera shyness or even plain contrariness today in their motion-picture debut . . .

I don't see how those reporters could have overlooked Marie's yells, but she always has been able to twist them around her finger because she is the Littlest One. She thinks it is very exciting to be known as the Frail Type, but Nurse says it just means that she hasn't enough vitamins.

It is very funny to see all these Grownups from Hollywood sitting around waiting for me to cry. And I am not going to cry if it costs me the lead in this picture. Because it would only be human nature if I did, and if I don't I will be called temperamental. And there is nothing like temperament for getting service around this place and headlines in all the papers. Once I held my breath for almost a minute and got written up in a London paper. Now if I could only get the hiccoughs for several days, I would get enough publicity to be the leading lady in "The Country Doctor."

There is a very funny thing called a microphone hanging in front of my face all day, just in case. In case I gurgle. Well, I'll spit, and I'll purr, and I'll make bubbles, but I won't gurgle, of course. I'll just suck my thumb and be very quiet like Miss Garbo. And that will make Yvonne very jealous because she can't think of anything any more original than smiling at the Director. Yvonne has got such quaint ideas about getting to Hollywood. Well, can you beat it? She's sitting on his lap now! Some girls will do anything to get in the movies, but I certainly wouldn't go that far. Not even if I thought of it. . . .

* * * *

Director Henry King, his cameraman and the two adult stars, Jean Hersholt and Dorothy Peterson, were in the nursery with the quints for almost an hour . . .

Of course, I am not complaining because when we complain it always sounds five times as bad as it really is. But it does seem that they might have sent Mr. Gable up here instead of Mr. Hersholt. Of course, he is very sweet and looks sort of like the Little Man who officiated at our coming-out party, but I would not have signed the contract if I hadn't just heard Mr. Gable was looking for the Right Girl. But then, I suppose it's just as well. He could hardly ask me to settle down when I am just starting on my career. . . .

The Other Four and I talked through our cribs last night about what names we are going to take when we become stars. I think Barbara Gloria Vandermeed is very pretty and they could call me Barbara Gloria for short. Annette said she had already picked Gloria and that I couldn't have it. So we decided whichever one of us screamed the loudest could get the name. Well, I got it! But I also got a lecture from Nurse, who does not seem a bit impressed by movie stars. When I get to Hollywood, I am going to let Nurse go. Because no matter how temperamental I get, she always says I am just bilious.

I lay awake after the Other Four had snuggled down under their blankets and thought about my career. I think I shall look very nice in movie magazines provided Nurse doesn't insist on bundling me up too much. For how can a girl show that she is just as good an actress as Miss Dietrich if she has chinchilla leggings on?

* * * *

It was Marie's first real walk, although she had taken a step or two before . . .

The Littlest One took her first step today. And so she has already started trying to fix her hair like Ginger Rogers. I never saw such a girl for jumping at conclusions and cookies. Cecile and I dared her to kick up both feet at once like Mr. Astaire. . . . The Little Man says no bones are broken but that she had a very narrow escape. Well, after all, a girl has got to learn sooner or later that two steps do not make Astaire.

The only thing that bothers me is how are we going to pose in bathing suits in all this snow? Because, if I do say it, I have got other good reasons for getting into the movies besides being able to look soulful. And Nurse says that the best movie stars are three-fourths bathing suit and one-fourth soulful.

When we have our press conference this afternoon, I am going to suggest the headlines: FROM BIBS TO BATHING SUITS or FROM CRIBS TO CAREER. It seems to me that somebody is falling down on the job because we do not get as many clippings as we used to. Oh, well, just a few months more and we'll be having another birthday. Then just watch the press notices. . . .

It was a very smart idea, all being born at one time, though nobody seemed to think so when it happened. First the Little Man slapped me on the back, then slapped something into my mouth, and then slapped me into bed. And because there were Four Others to be slapped at the same time, we are now in the movies!

* * * *

Director King expressed delight with the first day's progress and said he hoped to complete the scenes with the babies within a week . . .

Maybe the Director is satisfied, but we're not! After this picture is shown, they'll never let us play anything but baby parts. And I did so hope that after we got in the movies we would be billed as the Sintuplets.

The Director is very worried because he cannot think of a word which means five times as big as colossal. Yesterday they made what is called a "rush" and let us look at ourselves on the screen. Cecile wouldn't even look because she confided to me that there is a very cute little boy who lives down the road and she doesn't really care whether she has a career or not. And Yvonne went to sleep after the first half hour. Well, what could you expect of a girl who is content just to be known as the Champion Patty-cake Patter of Callander, Canada? Marie stayed in her crib and pretended she was Indisposed. I think it was because she was afraid she would not look as much like Ginger Rogers on the screen as she did like Marie Dionne.

Oh, oh, oh . . . I wish I hadn't looked now because I can't tell whether I'm Emilie or Annette. . . .

BETT HOOPER.

London At Random

By Edward Acheson.

LOVE of animals is as characteristically British as an eyeglass. In London it is said that as a sure-fire charity appeal a baby wombat deserted by its mother has it over an orphaned child in the ratio of eight to one.

Her picture was published in an evening paper. In the picture she held a monkey. To the casual eye the monkey looked like a perfectly ordinary zoo-type specimen, but it wasn't. Actually it was a very rare monkey which could be found in only one remote spot on the globe.

This fact was brought forward by a distinguished man of science who went on to protest against the animal's captivity. He pointed out that the monkey would most certainly starve to death on any diet obtainabe in Great Britain, if it didn't succumb prematurely to the English habit of having drafts on the floor instead of carpets.

Feeling ran high. Here was a poor trusting monkey whisked out of its hothouse climate into an English winter, served food it couldn't eat and generally tortured in a wholly criminal fashion to satisfy the whim and vanity of an actress.

At this point the actress, who had been away, returned to London quite bewildered at the publicity accorded her stuffed monkey.

Next to the common misapprehension that all Americans talk through their noses, the most consistent British gibe at the United States is in the matter of criminology. "But you're such a lawless people: your press is so sensational." Which we and it may be.

But in their modest English way, it must be admitted that the local criminal and the local newspapers don't do so badly. On a single page of the Evening Standard last week appeared the following headlines:

The Ravine Mystery: Two Female Bodies.
Dead on Bedroom Floor.
Court Story of Confession to Doctor.
Mystery of Missing London Girl.
Wooed Exhumed Widow's Daughter: Found Shot.
Girl Accused of Murdering Her Mother.
Acquitted of Stabbing Charge.

Maj. Arthur Balbernie, one-time officer of the Gurkas, of the Simla and Gharwal Rifles, former adjutant to the Albanian general staff, veteran of unrecorded wars in Afghanistan, Mesopotamia, Egypt and India, has just returned from New York.

He went over with an American foreign correspondent, who thought that a review of the peculiarly American types of violence might interest this gentleman whose preference was just that. Hence, a letter to Mayor LaGuardia and the arms of the police force was wide open.

The major had a lovely time. He had a screaming siren radio car to collect him from the apartment and bring him back. The inspection took two full days and as a special fillip, as he was being driven back to the Park avenue apartment at the conclusion of his tour, the chief of police carried on a one-sided conversation with him over the short-wave radio in the police car.

"Well, major, I guess you've seen about all there is to see of our police work," said the chief. But the major hadn't. When he got up to his rooms he found everything in the middle of the floor. The apartment had been rifled from top to bottom. The major telephoned the police and it took 42 minutes to get a detective up there.

Towermen Of St. Marys

DRIVING through St. Marys County one gets an impression of a lot of little communities three or four miles apart, strung on lines of good roads, tree-fringed, with here and there on either side broad fields under cultivation. From the top of the tower at Great Mills one gets a very different impression; for most of the fields and roads and communities disappear entirely and one sees nothing but a huge forest roughly bounded by Leonardtown, Solomans Island, St. Marys City and the Virginia shore. Cecil Wise, the towerman, says on clear days he can see Point Lookout, and, in another direction, with the aid of binoculars, he can count houses on the Eastern Shore.

This is one of the brief seasons in the year when the towerman up on his lofty perch is prepared to demonstrate day by day that where there is smoke there must be fire. The other season is March and April. The two seasons invite fire because the leaves are on the ground. But there is less danger in the fall than in the spring for the leaves still retain some moisture. In the spring they are as tinder.

* * * *

The towerman is a soldier in the conservation army, the watch towers of which overlook the forests of the country. There are eight such towers in St. Marys County.

It is a tough climb to the top of the tower, a hundred and twenty feet, on successive flights of steps and landings, with open treads and single handrails; and, when the wind blows the unaccustomed climber holds tight and tries to avoid looking on the ground.

When the climb is accomplished and one has passed through a trap door, which is promptly shut, one finds oneself in a snug little windowed room, with a map of the county on a stand in the center for that portion of it seen from the tower, a desk and chair on one side, an oil stove in one corner, and outside one of the windows a thermometer and barometer.

* * * *

But one's first thought is of the view outside.

Once on a time in Maryland the forests knew an abundance of chestnut and white pine; but nature killed the one and man the other. No full grown chestnut has survived the blight but here and there a lusty young tree pushes its way toward a healthy maturity and may escape or overcome the germs that lie in ambush ready to attack.

Here in St. Marys County white pine is less a tree than a tradition. So far as I know there is but one in the county, and that was born on distant soil. Many native woodsmen have never seen one growing. But in the walls of ancient houses and old barns the white pine still endures, straight, clean and sound.

* * * *

Here, as elsewhere, the world has wasted wood; less recklessly perhaps than in some other places; but with credit due, it may be, to lack of opportunity rather than to wisdom and forethought. There was once some traffic with the paper mills. Gum and poplar were first used for pulp wood (pug wood to the workers) and it was cut in cordwood lengths and skinned. Later pine was used. Great piles were always on the banks of the rivers waiting for the schooners to bear them north. But that trade died suddenly just a few years ago.

When wood is cut nowadays it is with some care and with some thought of the future. The Department of Forestry has imparted instruction and wayside signs keep the lessons in mind; that fires must be prevented and trees and game preserved.

The towerman keeps a log, in which he records weather conditions, fires reported and other incidentals. He sends it to the State Department of Forestry and in due time gets a typewritten copy to put on his file. Towerman Wise, therefore, has a complete record of the tower's four years of existence and of his service during that time.

* * * *

He is familiar with the couple of hundred square miles he scans. Moreover his map is equipped with sighter and pointer and he can always locate with fair exactitude the spot in which smoke is rising and a fire is suspected. He can usually tell, too, the nature of the fire. A burning house or barn sends out black billows. A woods fire starts black and turns gray.

Not all the smoke he sees means disaster. Farmers after getting in their winter's wood will burn piles of brush. Sometimes they clear land by burning it over. But these things are watched by the towerman, for fires sometimes get away from those who tend them.

One fire that got away some 20 years ago burned for two weeks and burned over many miles of territory. Those who saw it tell the tale tersely: "It came down one side of the Three Notch road with a north wind and came back on the other side with a sou'easter."

When they go into details it grows more exciting; the awfulness of the sights and sounds when the flames rose high; the moments when the weary workers thought their work was done and then saw the fire approaching from another direction more terrible than ever; the narrow escape of houses and men, and the fear-driven inhabitants of the forest. "All the varmints come a-runnin'," says Eph; "an' Mistah Fox an' Miss Rabbit nevah no min' each other, but run side by each."

But that was before conservation days. Nowadays, while a fire is not impossible, it is less likely to happen than in the old days, and when one does happen the work of squelching it is no longer haphazard.

GRIF ALEXANDET.

Midinettes Of Paris Praise St. Catherine

Kisses and Bonnets Abound on Boulevards as 25-Year-Old Seamstresses Observe Annual Day of Hope for Spinsters.

By Andre Vulliet.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

WITH a display of fancy bonnets and much kissing of gentlemen pedestrians on the boulevards, Paris midinettes the other day revived one of those old French customs that form an inseparable part of the life and charm of the city.

November 25 was and has been since time immemorial consecrated to St. Catherine, the patron saint of all unmarried women, and thousands of them working in dressmaking establishments, offices and shops make a day of it, irrespective of whether they are single through preference or disappointment.

Had you been loitering on the main boulevards in the afternoon, you might have been startled to find yourself suddenly hugged and the recipient of a resounding smack on the cheeks. It would have been quite improper to recoil and appear shocked at such familiarity. The winsome donor of this favor was simply exercising her rights. It is her privilege on this day to kiss whomever she pleases. In fact you could have considered yourself very lucky to be picked out from among the rest.

All this is done in a charming, innocent way much to the amusement of spectators. However, policemen on duty around the Rue de la Paix and the Rue Royale are usually the lucky ones as far as the grand total of kisses go. Gallant men, young and old, keep pace with the girls as they parade down the street, but very few kisses are meted out to them.

* * * *

ST. CATHERINE'S DAY is now almost exclusively feted by those little midinettes who stitch and sew, unknown to the grand ladies who wear those latest Paris creations which are a product of their labor and imagination. In the larger establishments a gala dinner is offered the girls on the premises. For many of them this is a royal treat and quite a change from their usual "croissant" and "cafe creme" noon time fare. In the afternoon the spacious salons are opened for dancing and the girls can disport themselves to their heart's content in these forbidden premises where only Madame la Directrice and Madame la Premiere usually set foot. Girls belonging to lesser houses eat out and afterward fill the streets in happy, noisy throngs.

Every year a prize is offered for the most original bonnet. It is imperative that this be made from odds and ends found around the shop in true midinette style. Some of the exhibits show uncanny workmanship and imagination. We remember one to which were affixed many queer-looking appendages. It presented a severe criticism of the government. On it was written "decree-laws," "taxes," "10 per cent cuts," "higher cost of living," and what not.

* * * *

NOT so long ago to wear the bonnet of St. Catherine meant acknowledgment of failure in the matrimonial competition as the only career then open to women was marriage. The term "old maid" has now become obsolete due to feminine emancipation and cosmetics. Now all this has changed and the girls proudly display their bonnets and their 25 years.

After the customary parade down the boulevards they usually attend a special service at the church of Notre-Dame-de-Bonne-Nouvelle and afterward march to decorate the small statue of St. Catherine which stands in the second story niche of a building. The rest of the day is spent banqueting, dancing and having a general good time roller coasting and shooting the chutes at Luna Park.

Although the custom for damsels who have rounded out their 25 years to don bonnets on this day is of fairly recent date, the celebration of St. Catherine's fete dates back to the Crusades.

A summary of her life is not out of place here.

Hecaterina was the daughter of the Governor of Alexandria and was both beautiful and versed in philosophy and the sciences. As it was then the custom, she was called upon to uphold a thesis before the erudite professors of the city. This oral examination took place in the Areopagus and the students were supposed to wear a toga and bonnet. Hecaterina complied with this custom, although she was a woman. Being at the time 25 and having vowed herself to chastity, her bonnet was chosen as a symbol of virginity and adopted by modern "Catherinettes."

An officer of the emperor fell in love with her and asked for her hand. On account of her vow and being a Christian she refused the offer and was cast in prison. Hecaterina managed to escape and, followed by 40 virgins who wanted to share her life, founded a monastery in the Delta. There she was discovered and after benig put to the torture wheel was beheaded along with her followers.

A Disciple Of St. Catherine.

Christian Egypt still honors her under the name of Dimiana, which was the name she adopted upon being baptized. A curious fact is that today her tomb is venerated by Christians, Moslems, and Jews alike.

For many centuries it has been the custom in French convents to serve a very special fare on this day and to give the students a holiday. In French Canada the maidens of the household prepare a sort of toffee and invite the village swains in for the evening to help pull out the sticky candy in long inch-thick strands. It is afterward put in the snow to cool and cut in pieces for distribution. If the toffee is good, it is carefully preserved by the favorite young man of the group and is a permanent sample of the young lady's culinary capacities.

Among The Magazines

In summarizing an answer to Mr. H. J. Laski in the autumn issue of The Southern Quarterly, William Yandell Elliott writes:

"Democratic and constitutional government is in sad need of finding a clearer defense of its own faith. It must return to a wisdom like Aristotle's theory of the mixed state. It cannot admit, as Mr. Laski does, any absolute pattern of human justice which must be imposed, whether of economic 'individualism' or of Marxian collectivism. Its economy will be mixed to conform to the degree of acceptance which state control has won from the electorate, for a given sector of the national system. Its method must be one of experiment and not of imposition by fiat, even a fiat from a plebiscitary majority. Its reading of history, however, must do justice to the stable and organic character in its institutions as well as to the empirical. Such a philosophy of history will give purpose a place like that assigned to it by Hobhouse rather than by the pragmatic anti-intellectualists. It must equally give to the economic and to the deterministic factors of other sorts their due in terms more like those of Harrington and Madison than Hegel or of Marx. Madison was not an advocate of class struggle. He wished to curb 'factions.'

"The real danger to the constitutional systems of the great modern democracies lies in the disintegration of those primary groups and voluntary associations which produce individuals capable of self-discipline and voluntary cooperation. The family, the neighborhood, the school, the church—these must be restored or new groups must take their places. The beliefs on which these units function as centers of social development are in need of reshaping, just as are the beliefs about social justice, and property. But Marx offers a Procrustean remedy. He recognizes nothing but class. Russia today is painfully trying to rebuild what a Marxian revolution destroyed.

"Human history has shown the disintegration of great societies, in which economic changes, urbanization, and the like, all played a crucial part. But it has also shown the regenerative power of great faiths to reshape order from chaos, as the Holy Roman Empire did. The contemporary impact of Marxian materialism is being met, outside the great democracies, by an even more crass reaction toward racial and national myths in the fascist countries. Democracies, unless they cultivate self-discipline and spiritual values in their own citizens, are likely to find no better answer. The battle lines seem to be drawn by the parties. But the real action is being fought out in the supporting zones of church, home, school, and local community.

"Mr. Laski and the Marxians would say the battle is lost there because radio, press, and propaganda of every sort have conspired with mass production and 'wage-slavery' to destroy the centers of resistance to enslavement to the capitalist order. But does not the issue lie deeper still? Would turning the instruments of production over to a state—even such a state as utopian communism conceives and Russia certainly does not realize in practice—would this increase the stature of man's moral dignity or add an iota to his freedom? Economic pressure is still economic pressure, property is still property, and its disposal generates political struggle under any system. Kulaks have to be 'liquidated,' and the peasants 'collectivized.' A regeneration of men's spiritual values is not to be accomplished by a Five-Year Plan, nor by a gospel according to Marx."

To Lessen Accidents

Reader Suggests Traffic Towers At 50-Mile Intervals.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It would seem to be self-evident that the principal cause of automobile accidents is due to the lack of proper policing of streets and highways. The roads in the country particularly are not now policed to any extent against the reckless driver, the inexperienced driver and the intoxicated driver. The highways have become more dangerous than the jungles of Africa, and, as might be expected, it is mostly the innocent who suffer.

A toll system could be established on the State roads, one toll tower, as a suggestion, every 50 miles, and at each tower every driver of every automobile or other motor vehicle should be required by law to come to a full stop. Two police officers for every 50 miles of highway should be appointed. All of these towers on each highway should be connected by telephone.

The annual cost of maintenance could be raised by imposing a toll of 50 cents per 50 miles at each toll station. This would amount to 1 cent a mile. There should be an exemption from payment of toll for cars owned by farmers and persons residing near the toll stations. The tolls would be paid principally by through-traffic automobilists. Trucks should pay the same toll.

The necessary maintenance might also be raised by the imposition of a charge of $1 per year for operating a car, or by a tax of 10 cents on tires, or a very small per cent of the tax on gasoline could be appropriated.

There should be some new highway laws adopted regulating the use of the highways. Speed limits should be established and rigidly enforced by the traffic policemen. The rules about passing cars going in the same direction and in the opposite direction should be established by law and rigidly enforced.

No one should be permitted to operate an automobile or truck except after an examination, physical and as to his or her fitness to operate a car.

Any person operating an automobile or truck in an intoxicated condition should, for the first offense, have his or her license to operate suspended for 30 days. For the second offense his or her permit should be suspended for four months; and for the third offense, he or she should be sent to jail for 90 days, and his or her permit revoked.

Every person should be required to carry on his person a license to operate his motor vehicle and be required by law to exhibit same to traffic policemen when lawfully demanded.

Relative to the accidents which occur in our incorporated towns and cities, these could be greatly reduced if the towns and cities were made liable by law for the damages to property and persons arising out of the automobile and truck accidents. If such a law were adopted the towns and cities would employ a far more competent traffic police force than they do at present, with the result that the traffic laws in the towns and cities would be more rigidly enforced and less accidents would occur. Such a law will not be either new or original, because already towns and cities are liable to pedestrians and others using the streets for avoidable accidents occurring thereon due to the negligence of the municipality. It does not require any stretch of imagination for this same law to be extended to traffic accidents, because the same are largely due to the negligent way in which the traffic policemen in our towns and cities are performing their duties.

In favor of all persons and their property injured or damaged from accidents on the streets and highways, every owner of an automobile or truck should be required by law to carry insurance for the benefit of himself and his fellow passengers and his car, and for the benefit of third persons and their cars injured and damaged from such accidents. Such a law could be modeled after our present employers' liability statutes, and the same should be enforced by one of the existing boards or commissions having jurisdiction over the streets and highways.

In truth, and in fact, "the war" on our streets and highways results in very nearly as many casualties annually as those which occur in a fair-sized war itself. There were not many above 50,000 of our soldiers killed in the World War, and not above 500,000 wounded. The casualties on our streets and highways this year will exceed these figures.

As with the weather, everybody complains about the conditions most of the time, but nothing is ever done about it.

The time has come to act.

The Naval Conference.

Christian Science Monitor—"The question raised by the renaissance of German sea power during the past five years promises to prove even more tangled and unyielding. * * * European naval apathy has been transformed into almost frenzied naval competition. * * * Germany, France and Italy are reluctant to abandon the right to devise and build a "freak" ship which might give them a temporary but decided advantage at some particular moment. * * * Hope for a solution of this problem rests primarily in a revolt of taxpayers against unbearable costs."

Houston Post—"It will be nothing short of a marvel if any progress is made at the meeting in London toward getting rid of any of the present burden of maintaining navies or of preventing an increase in the burden. * * * However much such countries as the United States, Great Britain, Russia and France agree in principle that naval armaments should be curtailed by all the principal powers, not one of them is likely to dare to risk curtailing its own naval strength while Japan and Italy are repudiating treaties and resorting to force to carry out what they euphemistically refer to as their 'national destiny.'"

Buffalo Evening News—"There will be no departure from the stand taken by the Japanese at London last year, Admiral Osawa Nagano, the chief delegate, declared. * * * Great Britain has abandoned its support of the ratio system. It proposes instead that each naval power announce in advance what it plans to do in the way of warship construction during the next few years and that some effort be made to get an agreement on the basis of these programs. This country, however, clings to the ratio system as the best yet devised to make naval limitation possible. Thus the London parley appears doomed to failure even before it meets."

St. Louis Globe Democrat—"What will happen now if no new agreement is reached? Japan, it is assumed, will endeavor to build a navy equal to that of the United States. That would force this country to build more ships to maintain its naval superiority, and this in turn would force Great Britain to build more in order to maintain its equality with the United States. All other naval powers would enter upon a period of enlarged naval construction, and the world would see such an armament competition as it has never seen before. Such a race would be as dangerous as it would be costly to all. * * * It is not a comforting outlook. There never was a time when the world so needed peace, or so earnestly wanted peace, as now, yet overwhelming circumstances are trending in the direction of war."

Baltimore Sun—"Unfavorable as the setting is, some hope might be encouraged if only there were evidence of a desire to arrive at some accommodation or if there existed some concrete proposals embodying the idea of limitation. As a matter of fact, the only proposal that has so far been suggested is the English scheme for a pooling of information concerning future programs. America, most secure and uninvolved of all the powers, is in the best position to offer some new principle of limitation. Sufficient comment on the most probable use of that position is provided by Secretary of Navy Swanson's annual report to the President: 'For the present the policy of this department remains unchanged. . . .'"

Excerpts From Our Letters

The President's Speech.

President Roosevelt's speech in Atlanta, Ga., on November 29 was just so much "hot air." He is a politician from start to finish.—Frederick E. Horstmann, New York City.

For Edith Maxwell.

Cannot public opinion do something for the poor, helpless, defenseless, vivacious mountain girl, Edith Maxwell? The prison sentence given her was an outrage to humanity, terribly unfair and horribly unjust—Mary Moore, Washington.

New Tax Plan?

Your November 21 editorial on our "Chaotic Tax System" clearly shows some of its glaring deficiencies. Ought we not exempt useful industries, factories, homes and honest incomes because of the beneficence and put heavier taxes on intoxicants and narcotics?—Dr. Webster Grop, Hagerstown, Md.

Constitutional Amendments.

If Congress is to be the sole judge of the validity of its own laws, the result would be the abolition of the written Constitution altogether. For while in normal times the Constitution would not be disregarded, in periods of stress like the present the temptation to Congress to stretch its powers to meet an emergency would be irresistible, as we have had ample cause to determine. If such changes in our fundamental law are to come, it should surely be as the result of amendments duly presented and ratified by three-fourths of the States.—E. C. Reynolds, Washington.

District Revenue.

Increased sources of revenue for the District of Columbia should all come from an increased lump sum from the Federal Government, as the Federal buildings and lands, including Federal parks, if properly taxed, would yield the required revenue; but if that is unobtainable, we could with justice tax the chain stores. There are sufficient precedents in other States to justify our taxing chain stores here in the District in an increasing rate in proportion to the number of stores in any one corporation—Howard Woodson, Washington.

No Miracle Man.

I voted for Roosevelt in 1932 for the reason he said he would not forget the forgotten man. I am of the honest opinion that he has lived up to his promise as far as it is humanly possible. I did not expect a miracle man; I still don't.—John C. Butterfield, Greystone Park, N. Y.

Economy Vs. Economics.

Political economy is as exact a science as astronomy and should be respected accordingly. But "economics" has been substituted for it. It is to be hoped that a turn of the tide will soon take place and that outraged people will demand that both in colleges and at the seat of government, the science of political economy will be restored to its proper place and respected accordingly—H. W. Allen, Wichita, Kans.

Hitch-Hikers.

It has occurred to me that hitch-hiking might be improved to the mutual benefit of both the hiking and the driving public. I propose the formation of a national "I pay as I ride" club with headquarters in Washington. Each member shall pay nominal dues, say 10 cents per year. In return he receives a large badge (easily recognizable from a moving automobile) with his number on same. Then he should agree to stay off the highway well out of the path of traffic; to display his badge to motorists, and to reimburse the motorist at a rate of between one half a cent and one cent per mile for distance ridden.—G. E. Van Meter, Lanham, Md.

Illogical Application.

On the economic theories of capitalism and private property we constructed our political government in conformity thereto as expressed in our Constitution, Bill of Rights, and legislation. To adopt a new theory of economics and then attempt to apply it under present political arrangements is most illogical, and one might say illegal, for the application involves an interpretation not intended originally even under the most liberal interpretation. It is not strange then to behold rulings declaring the NRA, the Frazier-Lemke act and others as illegal invasions of our political tenets.—Politicus, Washington.

Correspondents Discuss Communism, Law And Interracial Sports.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Isn't it just wonderful that this fair District of Chaos is now achieving a celebrity second only to that of Dayton, Tenn.?

In Washington, it seems, naughty Communists have actually dared to assume that the bill of rights, appended to the Constitution, meant what it said in guaranteeing freedom of speech. Furthermore, historians have been so presumptuous in preparing text books for the instruction of children as to spread the facts concerning the party that has control over one-sixth of the earth's surface before the students. That just can't be done in this enlightened community, for Gen. Fries, like Horatius at the bridge, stands guard.

The doughty general has a rival, however. Mr. McCarl, dictator by the grace of a "futilizing" Congress, apparently thinking that the assinine law passed by Congress to prevent the advocacy of communism in the schools was not sufficiently stringent, has added to the teachers' oath two words, "or elsewhere." In other words, the instructor of our youth must be opinionless even out of school hours as well as factless in the classroom on the taboo subject.

Up and at 'em, Fries and McCarl! Perhaps you can summon to your aid Congressman Blanton, who has been known to let his fists fly in defending some measure he was trying to ram down the throats of this long-suffering community.

C. U. Law Requisites.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In an editorial in The Post on November 28 there appears a well-deserved compliment to Georgetown University Law School for raising its entrance requirements to the bachelor's degree.

The congratulations extended to Georgetown University are well deserved and fully warranted.

Possibly it did not occur to the writer of the editorial that the City of Washington could point with pardonable pride to the fact that the Catholic University Law School has been operating for the past two years upon the basis of requiring a bachelor's degree for admission. The only exceptions we have made here are that a few selected students from this institution have been permitted, after completing three years of college work, to take the first year of law in lieu of the fourth year of arts work and to receive the A. B. degree at the end of that year. Upon the completion of two years more of law, they are awarded a law degree. In this way an unusually gifted student is enabled to earn both degrees in six years.

An Interracial Game?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The game between the Mexican All-Stars and Central High School was a great game and the spirit promoting the game was greater—in spite of the fact that it was working backward.

When I first heard that the game was being proposed I immediately thought of the mother who wanted her little son to be friendly with the nice little boy in the next block when he was antagonistic toward his own brother at home.

I firmly believe in using any means possible to encourage and cultivate good will toward other nations, but it seems like a farce; in fact, it is paradoxical to encourage harmony and good will with other families when there is constant friction in the homeland.

If there is any city within these United States in which practices in all affairs, be they recreational, religious, or economic, should be the epitome of democracy, that city should be the Nation's Capital.

In other words, if we are going to have a football game for good will with any team, let us begin at home and promote a good will interracial game, featuring the best Negro and white high school teams of the city.

Yours for a big interracial game on January 1, featuring the outstanding white and the outstanding Negro teams.

NRA Taught Lessons Despite Its Collapse

Though an Administrative Failure, Blue Eagle Gave Nation Practical Education in Complexity of an Industrial Democracy.

By George Stuart Brady.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Lieut. Col. Brady joined the office of the National Recovery Administration on August 1, 1933, as deputy administrator. He subsequently became deputy assistant administrator for policy and later assistant administrative officer. Since the reorganization of NRA he has been attached to the staff of Maj. George L. Berry, co-ordinator for industrial co-operation.

HUNDREDS of industrialists and labor leaders are expected to gather at the convention called by the Government tomorrow to consider means for promoting industrial recovery and aiding reemployment in private industry. It is unprecedented. The nearest approach to such a gathering was the one called by the British government in February, 1919, to promote industrial peace. The present convention has more far-reaching aims. It hopes to profit by the experience of the emergency legislation. Its avowed aim is not to perpetuate that legislation, but to plan a course for business through the complicated paths of this mechanical age.

The NRA cost millions in direct salaries, but this was a cheap price to pay for the experience if we have the courage to face the truths learned. Our experiment "to make the world safe for democracy" was costing at the time of the Armistice $44,000,000 a day, and it apparently taught us little. We did learn something from the two years of NRA toward helping us apply democracy to our industrial system.

That industry was in a desperate plight in June, 1933, no one can deny. Labor was demanding a 30-hour week to force industry to take up the unemployed, and the Black bill was set aside only to give place to regulation of hours under NRA. Industry was calling for Government aid to save it from chaos.

Product Of Industrial Democracy.

THE NRA came, and did place some 3,500,000 workers back on pay rolls because of shortened hours and a real cooperative effort on the part of the employers to find jobs for unemployed. It is not accurate to say that the codes put these men to work. They were for the most part reemployed under the PRA, or President's Reemployment Agreement, which was known as the 'Blanket Code" and was signed voluntarily by 2,300,000 manufacturers and business men. To put moral pressure behind this, some 22,000,000 consumers signed pledges to buy goods only from firms doing business under the original Blue Eagle, as contrasted with the later code eagle. When the cotton textile code, the first adopted, was signed on July 9, 1933, it was shown that under the PRA agreements the industry had already raised employment from 314,000 in March to 400,000 in June.

No one claims that the NRA was responsible for industrial recovery. But that it was a powerful factor in bringing an upward trend in business no one can deny. The reemployment of 3,500,000 workers, thus increasing purchasing power with new wages and increased wage scales, besides the stabilizing effect of the industrial cooperation, certainly had its effect. The fact is that the business activity curve moved upwards sharply during the summer of 1933 and has maintained an average upward trend ever since. The business indices of such neutral agencies as the New York Times refute the statement that the upturn occurred after the Supreme Court's decision in the Schechter case.

NRA was an administrative failure because it neglected a principle upon which this Republic was founded, namely, that the very essence of democracy rests upon local government, and that "carpetbagging" by private industrial groups is no less intolerable to the people than the political carpetbagging that was done after the Civil War. It failed legally because it took advantage of one of the broadest grants of lawmaking power ever granted by constitutional lawmakers, and set out to make and unmake laws at a speed that was bewildering to the very groups who were asking for them.

* * * *

THE NRA legal staff did not report back to the Congress for specific legislation to meet the industrial problems it was encountering as was the case with the AAA. When Congress passed the broad lawmaking grant in Section 3(a) of the national industrial recovery act we were harassed by the worst depression in our history, but the acute emergency had passed long before May, 1935, and it would now appear that NRA should have placed itself on firm legal grounds by consolidating its experience in specific Congressional action to cover fundamental points.

It took the jolt of the Supreme Court decision to make everyone realize, both business and Government, that they were overstepping reasonable lawmaking bounds and that no democracy could permit an administrative agency to make and unmake laws of such wide scope at the will of individuals who were not a part of the legislative branch of the Government. The first three "exemption" orders were signed on August 4, 1933, after lengthy hearings. The legal folly of this procedure should have been apparent, and the utter futility of placing the highest administrative agency of the Government "on the spot" for granting individual requests of more than 2,000,000 business houses was just a matter of arithmetic.

The NRA codes came from the demands of industries themselves. I do not presume here to judge the intent of the industrial groups beyond what appeared in the codes and what was stated in Bulletin No. 1 of the Recovery Administration. From this latter the industries apparently took the literal interpretation of the statement:

> It (the NRA) is a challenge to industry which has long insisted that, given the right to act in unison, it could do much for the general good which has hitherto been unlawful. From today it has that right.

and also:

> We are relaxing some of the safeguards of the antitrust laws.

* * * *

A BULLETIN published by the Manufacturers Association late in May, about three weeks before the act was signed, giving instructions to trade association secretaries for code writing, showed a model code containing provisions for limitation of machine hours, control of equipment, allocation of production and other matters that had "hitherto been unlawful." The cotton textile industry was the first to receive an approved code, and in this code was a provision for the limitation of machine hours and also one for the control of new machinery installation. The records show that the industrialists themselves demanded these provisions, that labor was indifferent, or nearly so, and that the general public was apparently yet unconscious of the meaning and effects of the provisions.

Later, the press flayed NRA for the existence of code provisions of this kind, but throughout the two years there was a constant effort to keep restrictive provisions from the codes. The answer of the industrialists was that they should be given these privileges in return for what they considered their "concessions" to labor. The main points to be considered here are that all records indicate that the prime purpose of the national industrial recovery act, namely, the putting of men back to work, was accomplished in the period before the codes were approved, and that the codes were avowedly devices to obtain "concessions" not previously permitted under the antitrust laws. The "blanket code," with its free contract nature and its local and State control for exemptions, was shown by later developments to have been sufficient for the emergency, and further steps might better have awaited a plan approved by Congress.

If I should go to heaven and there find
  Celestial mansions built for my abode,
I'd ask the angel who appeared most kind
  To take me down a winding, tree-grown road—
I'd ask him if he'd please to build for me
  A little house, with windows opening wide
Upon the fields of God's Eternity—
  Sun-warmed, star-lit, and there let me abide.
And I would ask a chimney for the cold;
  A small, gay kitchen for celestial food,
Where you and I could watch the worlds grow old—
  Oh, then would heaven be heaven, and very good.

But Saturdays, to make things more complete,
We'd have a fling along the Golden Street.

Insurgent America

By Karl Schriftgiesser

TWICE within recent weeks this space has been devoted to books about the plight of the middle class. I have reviewed here, however imperfectly, Herbert Agar's "Land of the Free" and Lewis Corey's "The Crisis of the Middle Class," the first a volume of wishful thinking with some sound analysis of the American culture; the second a dyed-in-the-wool Marxist's economic interpretation of the muddle in which we are at present and a vigorous plea for exit via the Communist route. Now comes a third, and perhaps the best, book on this subject, Alfred M. Bingham's stimulating essay, "Insurgent America: Revolt of the Middle Classes" (New York: Harper & Brothers, $2.50). I say it is perhaps the best of the three for it is a forward-looking study which does not hark back to agrarianism as does Mr. Agar's, nor to a nineteenth century Marxist regime as does Mr. Corey's, but seeks the way out on a political platform which is at once both reformist and revolutionary.

"Insurgent America" is divided into four parts. The first part is devoted to a keen study of Marx and the proletariat, in which Mr. Bingham points out the logical weaknesses of the Marxist theory as a present-day policy, basing his conception upon an understanding of the present meaning of technics as set forth by Lewis Mumford in "Technics and Civilization." In fact, readers of that remarkable book will find much in Mr. Binghm's study which stems from Mumford and his sources, including Edward Bellamy. Both Mumford and Bingham believe in what Mumford calls a "basic communism," and both are convinced that Marxism, as generally understood, is outmoded because of its unmalleable nineteenth century ideology.

FROM orthodox Marxism and its proletarian program Mr. Bingham proceeds to an analysis of Fascism after pausing to discuss at length the historical rise of the middle classes. His chapters on Fascism are dispassionate, revealing, and they are without question the most important part of the book. They should be read by all who are alarmed—as everyone must be—at the incipient Fascism now obserbable in this country; an economic menace, as Mr. Bingham effectively proves, far more dangerous than Communism which, along with Herbert Agar, he believes will hardly grow to alarming strength in American soil

But a "basic communism," as opposed to an orthodox Marxism with its dogma of dialectic materialism, lends much to color Mr. Bingham's thinking. He dismisses the splitting up into classes upon which much of the Marxist theory rests and points out that, despite the arbitrary differentiation between "bourgoisie" and "proletariat," men and women persist in their "human nature" and refuse always to accept their class label. (Mr. Corey is not so aware of this, or ignores it.) Classes in the abstract may be clearly defined; in actuality they are confused, interlapping, nonexistant. And this is far more true here in this country than anywhere that the socialist program has advanced in Europe, especially in Russia.

American labor, is not, on the whole, class conscious. Today, despite the Communist propagandists it is perhaps less so than it was 60 years ago during the Knights of Labor movement from which the A. F. of L. grew. Dr. E. S. Bates has summed the matter up well in "Books": "As the A. F. of L. became more powerful, it became more conservative, not more radical. And during the last three years to the right of the A. F. of L. have arisen the still more conservative company unions with three and a half million members. If class consciousness is as weak as this in organized labor, a fortiori it is even less effective among the unorganized." In addition to this, for example, Mr. Bingham presents figures to show that between 1919 and 1929 the number of industrial workers have decreased, while the population of the cities has increased. The worker, under machines, has been greatly supplanted by the white collar worker. The Marxist revolution, the hope of the laborer, is now a useless dream.

BUT this, Mr. Bingham is quick to point out, does not mean that the Middle Class is conservative at heart, or lined up with the capitalist dictators. It is in rebellion against the capitalist leaders for one sound reason; capitalism no longer can afford the Middle Class the security it feels is its due. The Middle Class knows it is the capitalist goat. I can do no better here than to quote at some length Dr. Bates' excellent summary of this important section.

"Fascism, a phenomenon unforeseen by Marx, represents * * * precisely this rebellion, confused and uncertain as the huge vague class it represents. In both Italy and Germany, he shows, the movement was originally led by 'clerical and professional workers, students and young graduates of the universities unable to find jobs, restless sons of small business men, jobless army officers,' reinforced by the farmers and the lumpen-proletariat of the unemployed. The prominence in Fascism of the traditional middle class fetishes—nationalism, race prejudice, religious fanaticism and family 'discipline'—corroborate this interpretation of the movement. And yet, as Mr. Bingham is at pains to show, big business has been able to a very large extent to capture Fascism and retain the capitalist framework of industry—but a crippled capitalism, confined within the limits of autarchy and potentially, if not actually, restrained by a powerful though unintelligent political control—a transition state to something still unknown, but in its present form involving greater crimes against culture than have the worst excesses of either red terrors or our own capitalist robber barons."

• • • •

AMERICA is headed in this same direction. At least Mr. Agar thinks so and the stars and portents seem right for an impending disaster of this kind. Only if the Middle Class, now in restless and half-active revolt, can be brought into control on the side of righteousness, which means social and economic reform, can this Fascist nightmare be avoided. Gangsters, Huey Long, Hearst, the slumbering but not dead Ku Klux Klan are indications of the enemy within our gates. Unorganized workers, farmers, white collar clerks by the millions are "slowly being driven to desperation" and willing to listen to any megalomaniac who may arise with empty words of salvation.

"On the other hand, if our radical 'intellectuals,' instead of harping upon an impossible proletarian revolution which not even the proletariat itself desires, would devote themselves to supporting the better features of the Technocratic, Upton Sinclair and Farmer-Labor programs which already have a large following—if instead of preaching the 'class struggle' they would develop the possibilities of an economics of abundance—then in spite of all the Variegated Shirts the country could still be saved. The American people, according to every report, are pathetically eager for leadership. If the men of brains assume the task, the demagogues may yet be forestalled."

That's a pretty large order. In the face of the vigorous opposition to even the mild reforms of the Roosevelt program the way to its fulfillment would seem very difficult of following. Brain trusts are easy to ask for, but just as easy to demolish in a democracy once you get them.

Archie Returns

By Osgood Nichols.

"Somebody told me it was impossible. He said it would be just like trying to review the Bible. Well, he whooped for joy just as much as I had when I first saw it, grabbed it from me and curled up on a sofa with that intense joy one gets only from Saki, a re-reading after 20 years of the Mad Tea Party or 12-year-old Scotch.

"When I came back from my game of squash, he was still curled up. But "Archy Does His Part," by Don Marquis, was on the floor beside him. When he finally woke up he yawned.

"All the politics put me to sleep."

Yes, I'm afraid the busy little cockroach has been jumping into the cuff of the wrong people's trousers and riding down to Wall Street recently and listening to the lads who have had to retrench and get along with only five servants. Archy does his best to remember that he is the reincarnation of a vers libre poet, but can't quite convince himself that he hasn't been working 16 hours a day for 20 years and now it's all going to be taken away from him by that mad man in the White House who never worked a day in his life.

So, what ought to be a national holiday—the appearance of the third of the Archy and Mehitabel series—just turns out to be a bit disappointing. But, don't get me wrong. There are occasional spots when Archy returns to his native self, than which there is none whimsicher.

And we mustn't forget that just the existence of this little insect has made the world a better place in which to live.

Listening to England's Voice

Sir Philip Gibbs Roams Over England, Catches Moods and Opinions.

By John M. Clark.

HERE is a pleasant book—just that. But in these days of book after book on flailing facism, war in the East and war in the West, on the plight of the share-croppers and the despair of young novelists, on hunger, on strikes and Constitutional revisions, this is something to be thankfully received.

For example, in considering the present state of England's ruling classes, the author describes a distinguished assembly of the gentry at a recent London reception where he "narrowly escaped treading on a lady's train and pulling the frock off her body. As she seemed to be wearing little underneath, according to modern fashion, that was an escape from embarrassment. One has to watch one's step when going up a grand stairway with ladies who wear long tails to their gowns."

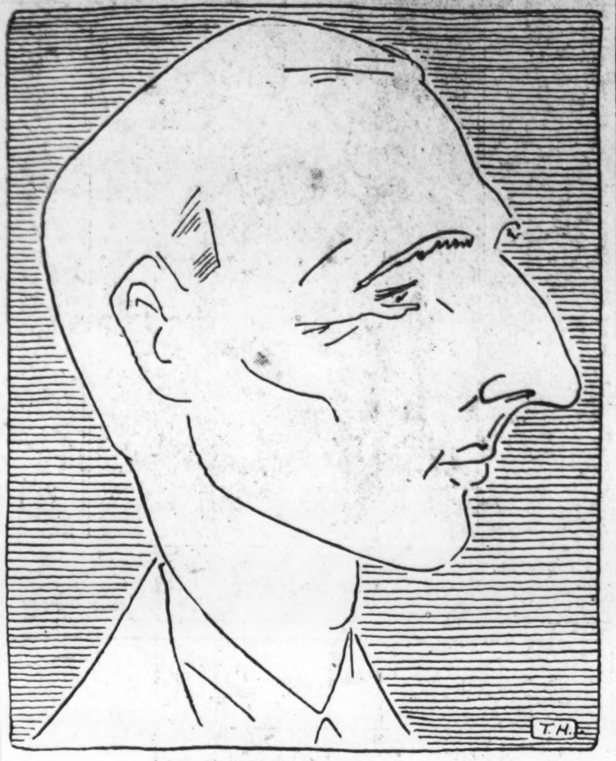
The title of the book, "England Speaks," suggests the weekly poll of public opinion which appears Sundays in The Post and other papers under the title, "America Speaks." In a sense, the book is a poll of public opinion with the difference that Sir Philip uses the casual words of the passing throng in place of the careful statistics of the American editors.

In a subtitle, he describes his book as "Being Talks With Road Sweepers, Barbers, Statesmen, Lords and Ladies, Beggars, Farming Folk, Actors, Artists, Literary Gentlemen, Tramps, Down-and-Outs, Miners, Steel Workers, Blacksmiths, Man-in-the-Street, Highbrows, Lowbrows and all Manner of Folk of Humble and Exalted Ranks With a Panorama of the English Scene in This Year of Grace 1935." Amen.

• • • •

THE book is, of course, a companion piece to his "European Journey," in which the distinguished British war correspondent recounted the gist of his conversations during a recent trip through the Continent.

The British, if Sir Philip is to be trusted (and who would say nay?), have one common thought at the moment, and that is "War?" Loving their King and Queen, joying in their quiet lanes, struggling to pull themselves out of the mires of the depression, playing their cricket and drinking their bitter—they are fearful of war. Again and again Sir Philip swings back to the theme.



PHILIP GIBBS.

He is at a dinner table in company with a French lady, a young lad just down from the university, an Elder Statesman: "Why has Britain turned anti-French and pro-German?" the conversation begins. And at the end the Elder Statesman is raising his eyebrows at the remark that people are talking of war within ten years. "As long as that?" he exclaims. "They are optimistic!"

Or again, he is at the seashore in the midst of a bank holiday throng. Family parties are sprawled about the beach. Little shop girls with their fellows are sun-bathing on the sand. Baldheaded fathers are playing at sand castles with their children. Sir Philip's eye catches a placard advertising

Or, John Tunis, the American sports writer, in England to broadcast the tennis at Wimbeldon, is a guest at Sir Philip's cottage near Sussex Downs. The summer sky above is criss-crossed with the slanting beams of anti-aircraft searchlights. For a moment a memory of the thrill of warfare shivers their spines. But then:

"Haven't we got beyond all that? Are we still practising for the same old grisly game? Is there no chance of security for the babes who are sleeping tonight—among them one small boy like a Saxon prince, sleeping with a fairy tale in his dreams above my porch? Are they to grow up for slaughter fields?" Sir Philip despairs.

• • • •

HE IS reassured somewhat by his visit to one of England's great public schools—the boys are no less virile than their predecessors of a quarter century before. They cry out against an Armistice Day address in which they felt the speaker to be reviling the Germans for their part in the World War. He is encouraged, though only a mite, by the order and cleanliness of London's doss houses (over here we prefer "flop houses"). He talks with young boys and girls—some of them from Germany—in the Youth Hostels stringing about England to lodge the many hikers whose numbers grow yearly. They are healthy, they are sane, they are informed.

'England Speaks' Chats Pleasantly of British Hopes and Fears.

In the end, he concluded that England is doing very well by some miracle of character and industry and, perhaps, a little luck. Its standard of life, he feels, in many classes is very high compared with other countries—the highest in the world just now. But in his epilogue he must add:

"It would be good to write that all's well with England. All is not well when there are thousands of homeless men and boys in the streets of London every night. All is not well when the splendour of our civilization, its glitter and glare, its wealth and power are built upon the labor of men like those miners up north, grievously underpaid for all the risks they take so that they would be better, or almost better, on the dole."

THIS would seem to give the lie to the opening statement that this is a pleasant book. Yet it does not for the fact that it is written with a kindness, with a sympathy, with a straight-forwardness all of which for all the gloomy conclusions, gives pleasure. There is effectiveness in the device of binding together 60 or 70 word-snapshots and interlarding them with a score of soft pencil sketches by Mr. Lander of English scenes: the book, particularly if the reader knows anything of England, holds up well for an evening.

"There is England, "is the feeling on turning the last leaf, "if any of us will be able to keep on an even keel in the coming months, it will be the English."

Current Events

By Walker Matheson.

WHEN the newspaper headlines suddenly splurge scare banners across the front page, and you wonder what it's all about, and why, and what Uncle Sam is liable to do, if anything—this volume tells you. If you are at all interested in current events and world affairs—and who is not, with Europe, Africa and Asia verging closely on the brink of battle?—you will find this a valuable work. It tells briefly, interestingly and to the point, what has been going on behind the scenes—it tells all that has been in the newspapers, taken each thread as they were unspooled in the capitals of the world, as it were, and weaves it into a whole tapestry, so that you actually see what has been going on. And a very edifying picture it makes, too.

The authors frankly state that this, their fourth volume sponsored by the Council on Foreign Relations, is by no means intended to be as ambitious as its title sounds, and cover the whole of American history for the year 1934-35. Their aim was to recount as accurately and fully as space would permit, the principal events in the United States which affected foreign interests, and the chief events in other countries that had a repercussion on our own. Their story, then, is neither final nor complete. But it is authoritative and compacts enough material to fill a ten-foot shelf. Actually it is only a footnote on history yet to be written.

Recent events in Italy and the Japanese movements to gobble more and more of China are lucidly explained in relation to the United States. How the European drama, revolving around Germany, and Great Britain's muddling through all are set forth with their probable effects on our own welfare.

The almost imponderable puzzle of money—one of the hardest things for the average man to understand—is solved by this volume without resorting to any tricks and the chapters on gold and silver are invaluable to any one who wants really to know what it is all about. Stabilization and the question of foreign debts are explained, so that what used to be as thick as mud to the average citizen is distilled to be now as clear as water.

Latin American relations, with stress on the new "good neighbor" policy; naval ratios; Japanese expansion and the gentle slamming of the "Open Door" in Manchukuo, all are summed up intelligently, honestly. The final chapters on the threat of war and America's neutrality problems are indeed revealing. A selected biography and appendices—priceless in themselves if you want more details on the problems presented—make up nearly a third part of the book.

If you want to be up on world problems rush—don't walk—to the nearest book shop.

Byrd's Second Trip

The Much-Traveled Admiral Writes a Sound and Stirring Report: "Discovery."

By John W. Maloney.

IN many respects it was extremely unfortunate that circumstances—especially the tremendous task of raising a large sum of money on which to operate—made it necessary for Admiral Richard E. Byrd to place himself in the hands of mass-production press agents skilled in the manufacture of crocodile thrills and ready-made heroes. For Admiral Byrd, in his recently published "Discovery," offers proof aplenty that Antarctic exploring is not the parlor game which ballyhoo experts inadvertently led many to believe it had become.

"Discovery" is the account of the second Byrd expedition to the Antarctic. More than that, it is a moving description of the awful grandeur that lies at the bottom of the earth under us—such grandeur, at times, as to bring that old wondermeat concerning the scheme of things in general. The book, in accurate detail, described the difficulties of reopening Little America, the base on the Ross ice barrier, and the start of the various sections of the expedition devoted to research in scattered phases of the sciences as well as pure exploration. From day to day the story unfolds itself, becoming more fascinating as time goes on in the stillness of the frozen nights, until one lives with the men down there in an unusually realistic fashion.

Lively moments enjoyed by members of the exhibition tend to keep interest at high pitch. Take, for instance, that little account of Klondike, the Guernsey cow and part of the herd of three, who was about to become a mother while en route to frozen pastures. Members of the exhibition were anxious to have the calf born within the Circle—therby bringing home another record.

"How far from the Circle now?" the man in charge of the "herd" asked.

"Three hundred miles," said the skipper, "and if you want that calf born within the Circle, my advice is to borrow the plane and fly the cow across, because it looks to me as if Klondike ain't goin' to wait for mere latitude."

The hours passed, and the man tending the cows breathed easier. They tiptoed topside for a look at the bergs. Suddenly a shout flew over the ship. Klondike had declined to wait for destiny!

Byrd has undoubtedly, in all his work of science and exploration, been motivated largely by the personal adventure in the undertakings. It is typical of the man himself and merely a natural expression of inherent desire. But it is perhaps this line of circumstances which has led many to criticize Byrd because of the enormous amount of press-agenting he needed to secure the necessary funds for carrying out his voyages of exploration. The New York Times and other publishers who paid Byrd for his writings and his pictures picked a winning proposition, from the financial standpoint, from the very first, yet still to them should go credit for lending their support and their imagination to such undertakings.

The exploring parties found mountains running east and west where they had previously been thought to stretch from north to south, which will not effect next year's elections. The peaks of the Rockefellers (that is, some mountains in the South Polar region) were found to be higher than had earlier been supposed. The total area brought within the range of vision of the areal or surface parties operating from the Little America base was approximately 450,000 square miles. Of this 290,000 square miles were previously unknown. At sea, in the neighborhood of 160,000 square miles of unknown waters were explored. Thus a grand total of new land and sea of roughly 450,000 square miles was added to the map—an area equaling Northeastern United States from the Canadian border to the Ohio River, including Pennsylvania and New Jersey and west to include Illinois.

Just what Admiral Byrd proposes to do with this land has not yet been ascertained. He remarked, on first returning, that it was unlikely he would return to look over it again. Still, to the army of scientists all over the world who have pounced on the data brought back, analyzing and weighing it, the trip and its results unfolds new chapters in the world's history. What effect, for instance, does that solid mass of ice congregated in the region of the South Pole, at times 2,100 feet thick, have on the life of the inhabitants of Washington, D. C., or those of Bangkok, Siam? To the layman these questions matter little. To the scientist they may (and we certainly hope they do) mean something.

No End of Authors

By Theodore Hall

TWO thousand years ago today, no more, no less, was born Quintus Horatius Flaccus, whom we call Horace. You may not remember the odes and epodes, satires and epistles, from the days when you pored over a dog-eared Latin text. But you must recall what Petronius Arbiter called Horace's "curiosa felicitas," that studied felicity of words which made all he wrote as clear as a silver bell, more enduring than monuments of brass. Phrases he wrote in the Roman tongue are still with us in our language—consider "carpe diem," "in medias res," "aurea mediocritas," "nunc est bibendum," "integer vitae," "virginibus puerisque," "simplex munditiis," and "dulce et decorum est pro patri mori." But all that we could spare, I think you will agree, if only to have saved for us through 20 centuries the freshness and loveliness of that girl the old poet knew—"dulce loquentem, dulce ridentem Lalage"—the sweetly prattling, sweetly laughing Lalage. A cup of Falernian, today, to Quintus Horatius Flaccus.

Donald Culross Peattie was awarded the Limited Editions Club's gold medal for the American work most likely to become a classic—said work being Mr. Peattie's memorable book on nature the year around, "An Almanac for Moderns." No better choice, any reader of that volume will know, could have been made. It was a pure delight when it came out, and it will, I fell sure, prove increasingly so . . . But the final committee—Carl Van Doren, Harry Hansen and Burton Rascoe—caught all the rest of us off base. As you may recall, one literary critic in each State was asked to submit a nomination from the year 1934. I voted for Dr. Freeman's "R. E. Lee," a very obvious choice. It turned out that the committee, anxious to set a high standard for the first award (and it must be observed, limited by the fact that the Limited Editions Club planned a fine edition of the work to be chosen—thus indicating no doubt, a single-volume work) could come to no agreement on the nominations. There was, it seemed, no available "classic" in 1934. So they brought Mr. Peattie's book under the wire, since it was written in 1934 though not published until March, 1935 . . . There won't be any complaints on that, except from the sea-lawyers.

GEOFFREY GORER, author of that excellent study of West African Negroes, "African Dancers," has just arrived in New York for a short visit. It's the first time he has been in this country . . . Keith Winter has also come over. He is the young British author of "Other Man's Saucer," "The Rats of Norway," and the play, "The Shining Hour." A new novel of his will come out in the spring and a new play will be produced this winter . . . Somerset Maugham has gone down to Nelson Doubleday's plantation in South Carolina. A new collection of his short stories comes out in Februry, entitled "Cosmopolitans." Allah is good! . . . Clemence Dane won't be over this season, as planned. She's too busy in London, at work dramatizing Max Beerbohm's "The Happy Hypocrite" for production next month. Ivor Novello has the leading role.

And guess what Dr. Will Durant is going to do? Become a travel courier, nothing less. In June he will lead a band of travelers and students to Greece, Palestine, Egypt and Italy—that is, provided there is any Egypt and Italy—and bring them back in September. Those interested should write him, care of Simon & Schuster, 386 Fourth avenue, N. Y. I ought to get at least a post-card scorched in Vesuvius for this free ad.

GO by any news-stand and you'd be sure we had enough magazines. But the ingenuity of man is endless, and a new one is coming which seems well worth mention. Ringmaster will be its name, Chicago its home, and caricature of people and events in the public eye, its purpose. Hear the editor, Harry McGuire: "In Ringmaster we hope to show the difference between talent turned to the usually shallow purposes of newspaper cartooning, and genuine caricature which is as old as Hogarth if little recognized, as yet, in this country; between illustrated wise-cracks which constitute the bulk of pictorial humor today, and caricature edged by humorous exaggeration but aiming above all at incisive characterization." Well and valuably said! . . . The fact is, you know, that the best caricature and social cartoons in the country, in the tradition of such masters as Honore Daumier and Wilhelm Busch, comes from the hands of the makers of etchings and lithographs. Ringmaster should be welcomed. . . . They are, by the way, very hospitable to newcomers. They want full-page caricatures, to fit their page size of 9¾ and 12½ inches, mostly in line and crayon, and they ask for a few bits of prose, around 2,000 words, written with satirical intent. Address 1 N. LaSalle street, Chicago. . . . Subscription for 12 issues, $5. . . . I'll tell you more when I see the first copy.

A. P. HERBERT has just been elected a Member of Parliament from Oxford University. How curious that custom would seem in America, with the Speaker of the House recognizing "The Gentleman from Purdue" and "the gentleman from Massachusetts Tech." I wonder if the British ever howl at academic robes in the government. . . . Mr. Herbert has written a new book, out next year, entitled: "What a Word!" and sub-titled, amusingly: "An Account of the Principles and Progress of 'The Word War' Conducted in Punch to the Great Improvement and Delight of the People and to the Lasting Benefit of the King's English, with Many Ingenious Exercises and Horrible Examples." Linguistic pundits and philological babus, take notice.

Horrible Stylistic Example Closer Home. "The Ash Can" department, of Thomas H. Uzzell's little literary sheet, The Blue Pencil, quotes this from a story in Collier's by W. B. Courtney: "Heavy of heart, the young American wormed back through the bush and reported to his induna, or commander, Maj. Allan Wilson, second in command of the column under Forbes, which was attempting to capture Lobengula, the King of the Matabele, who were warring upon the British colonists in Mashonaland in South Central Africa." . . . The way to get this, says the editor with rare forbearance, is to read it backward.

New Technique By Bone Men Stops Limping

Effects of Dread Paralysis Remedied by Process of Stretching Leg.

vice that both wires act as a unit. That is, one turn of a single screw pulls the bone. The stretching or separating is done by pulling only one portion of the bone while the other remains in position.

When, at the end of this four-week period, X-rays show that there has been sufficient growth of new bone to cover the gap created by the constant stretching, the leg is removed from the stretching apparatus.

All during the stretching period new bone growth is taking place. There is nothing unnatural nor artificially stimulated in the growth itself. Just as nature provides growth of new bone structure when a bone has been broken, so new bone cells are deposited and multiply at the opening created by the surgeon's saw.

Not all patients react alike and it is not absolutely predictable when complete union of the severed bone will be achieved. It is not entirely certain that such unity will take place, but in the 40 operations performed at this hospital since the surgeon in question perfected the technique, each case has been successful. And the ages of the patients cover all ranges, from children to middle-aged and old persons.

A remarkable thing observed after the successful stretching of the bone is that, once the patient has recovered completely, that leg which was previously affected so as to stunt its growth, often continues to grow normally. At least there is every appearance of normal growth when, as in the case of children, the operated leg keeps pace with the good leg in further normal growth, and there are no scars left.

Wires Remain Under Plaster.

When the stretching period is over, which is when the bone has been pulled to the desired length and when X-rays show that new growth is strong enough, the leg is encased in a plaster cast with metal bars to catch and hold securely the four wires which must still be kept in position although no further stretching is to be done.

There is no pain whatsoever after this and the patient is able to walk about in his leg cast. The very fact of walking, with carrying some of the weight of the stretched leg, promotes the additional growth of bone which is still to be achieved before the leg is finally strong enough. About three months are required for the growth of solid bone to completely fill the gap created by the cutting and stretching.

The maximum stretching rate, and it varies according to a patient's reaction, produces from 2 to 3 inches of new bone in a single month. The young patient interviewed expected to add more than 2 inchest to her leg during the treatment.

Before this operation was improved to its present efficacy there were only two methods for a person with a shortened leg to get about. One was the wearing of a specially made shoe to add the lost inches and the other to walk without such a shoe, generally an ugly contraption attracting attention, with a pronounced limp.

The limping gait must be achieved by twisting downward the whole pelvis, and this motion, over a period of time, most often produces a second deformity, curvature of the spine. Thus a single tragedy, unbearable enough alone, produces another when the needed inch or inches cannot be added. For young girls such deformities are especially heartbreaking because women's clothes, activities, and natural desires call attention to and are opposed by such an obvious deformity.

Thigh Bones Under Study.

Now that the compact unit of apparatus has been found precisely to fill the need—the patient is comfortable and does not have to be disturbed to dress wounds or even to make X-rays—the surgeon whose genius has made it possible, is conducting experiments to determine whether such stretching can be done on the thigh bones. There has been little consideration of such operations on upper extremities as, while a shortened arm is a hindrance, it is not so important, from the medical point of view, as a leg which must bear weight and be in constant use.

The operation is specifically discouraged as a means of satisfying the vanity of under-sized persons who may wish to be a few inches taller. Although the whole procedure is for the most part painless, there is still a degree of risk, as there is in any surgery. And where there is no need for undergoing that risk, where happiness and usefulness and independence are not dependent on those precious inches, physicians are strongly opposed to performing the operation.

Though the operation has been performed, in its present improved and successful form, for several years now, nothing much was generally known about it until the United Hospital Fund drive, now in progress in New York City, revealed this unusual work as part of the service rendered by the 81 voluntary hospitals associated in the campaign for $2,000,000.

Poetry Lovers Celebrate 2,000th Anniversary of Horace

Great Roman Influence Has Endured Through the Ages.

By Lester K. Born,

Executive Officer, Department of Classics, George Washington University.

This portrait of the great Roman poet Horace, from an old steel engraving, must not be taken too seriously, for it is said that no true likeness of the Latin songbird exists. Nevertheless, the imprint of his mind remains to influence poetry down through the ages.

Quintus Horatius Flaccus, or Horace, as his friends all call him, best loved of all Roman poets, was born on December 8, 65 B. C., just 2,000 years ago today. The entire year of 1935 has been designated the Bimillennium Horatianum, and in all countries of western Europe, in England, the United States and South America there are taking place, or have already taken place, occasions of an appropriate nature.

In some cases these have been addresses or public lectures, in some pageants and festivals, in others the preparation of memorial volumes of studies upon the poet, in still others exhibitions of manuscripts or rare editions of his works.

In the District of Columbia there is no central unified celebration, but various clubs and intellectual organizations have arranged programs commemorating Horace, the public schools are planning their contribution, the universities are each in their own way doing their part. Not least of the work in the District is the unspectacular but remarkable checklist of editions of Horace being prepared by Mr. Ernest Kletsch, of the Library of Congress.

Horatian Influence Constantly Met.

But why has Horace been singled out for the honor of world-wide celebration? Most everyone has heard of Horace sometime; everyone who reads not only Latin but English, French, German, Italian and Spanish poetry meets the influence of Horace constantly. But his influence is more important than that—he has entered into the daily lives of more thousands of people, in more countries, over a longer period of time than any other single poet.

That, precisely, is the reason why his 2,000th anniversary is being celebrated. He is alive today among us. What one of contemporary English or American writers will be read, appreciated and passed on as ever new 2,000 years from now? I dare say no one would venture to guess. Horace said he had built for himself a monument more enduring than bronze:

Now have I reared a monument more durable than brass,
And one that doth the royal scale of pyramids surpass,
Nor shall defeated Aquilo destroy, nor soaking rain,
Nor yet the countless tide of years, nor seasons in their train.
Not all of me shall die: my praise shall grow, and never end
While pontiff and mute vestal shall the Capitol ascend,
And so a mighty share of me shall Libitina foil.

Actually he has exceeded that prophecy by at least 15 centuries. His second prophecy, that he, the Roman swan, would fly where the Roman eagle never flew, has been amply justified. That brings us at once to a second logical question, "What quality has made Horace live on?" We can answer without hesitation that it is his universality, his ability to write about himself and his times in such a manner that he wrote for all people, for all time.

Poet Took Great Pride In Freedman Father.

Horace was born in the little village of Venusia, modern Venosa, which lies on the scantily watered plains of Apulia on the eastern side of the Apennines. Of his birthplace he was very proud, but infinitely more so of his father, a simple freedman, who was endowed with character and moral qualities far superior to his station. Horace has immortalized him in lines which do equal honor to father and son:

"* * * If, to venture on self-praise, my life is free from stain and guilt, and I am loved by my friends—I owe this to my father, who though poor with a starveling farm . . . boldly took his boy off to Rome, to be taught those studies that any knight or senator would have his own offspring taught . . . He himself, a guardian true and tried, went with me among all my teachers. Need I say more? He kept me chaste—and that is virtue's first grace—free not only from every deed of shame, but from all scandal . . . Never while in my senses could I be ashamed of such a father, and so I will not defend myself, as would a goodly number, who say it is no fault of theirs that they have not free-born and famous parents."

From this we learn also that Horace received a good education in the best city schools at the capital, and may deduce that much of the moral reflection inherent in his poetry of a later date is based ultimately upon the care he received at this important period in his life.

The second period of Horace's life begins with his college education at Athens. Here he not only became acquainted at close quarters with the various schools of Greek philosophy, but also with the great poets of bygone years—Alcaeus, Sappho, Anacreon, Archilochus—all of whom were destined to furnish Horace with meters, subjects and literary feeling. But a more immediate effect manifested itself in the meeting with Marcus Brutus, who came to Athens with his army shortly after the assassination of Julius Caesar. Horace accepted his flattering offer—to the jealousy of more qualified and more noble aspirants for the position—of a command, but his service was short-lived. In fact, it expired along with the republic at the battle of Phillippi in 42 B. C.

When honor at Phillippi fell
A prey to brutal passion,
I regret to say that my feet ran away
In swift iambic fashion.

Horace was no coward, he merely described his forceful separation from service in the language of a poet. He had ample precedent in his Greek models.

Horace's return to Rome marks the third period of his life and the beginning of his career. Ruined financially, deprived of his father's counsel and philosophy through death, he found a job as a Government clerk. (Imagine a Republican getting a job with the other party in power!) While Horace supported himself with his modest position, he turned his attention to verse. Two factors determined that his first form should be satire: first, it was fitted to his mood of the moment, when he felt that all that was stable and good had collapsed, and secondly, it was the one field of literature at that time which had not occupied the attention of any particular poet.

Early Works Marked By Cruel Satire.

These first poems, specifically the first of his two books of "Satires" and his "Epodes," are marked (or marred, as you prefer) by a caustic cruelty which entirely disappeared in a few short years. They reflect sharply the unrest, the moral laxity, the scepticism of a post-war era before "reconstruction" has taken place. Probably Horace's earliest poem is Epode XVI, which begins with these lines:

Already another generation is wiped away in civil strife,
Great Rome falls by her own strength.

* * * * * * *

We, impious generations of accursed blood, will destroy
Her, and the soil will be inhabited again by the beasts.

The gloomy reflection on the political life is paralleled by his personal satire in the second poem of book one.

"Here's one who, fearing to be called a prodigal, would grudge a poor friend the wherewithal to banish cold and hunger's pangs. Should you ask another why, in his thankless gluttony, he recklessly strips the noble estate of his sire and grandsire, buying up every dainty with borrowed money, he answers that it is because he would not like to be thought man and of poor spirit. He is praised by some, blamed by others. Fufidius, rich in lands, rich in moneys laid out at usury, fears the repute of a worthless prodigal; five times the interest he slices away from the principal, and the nearer a man is to ruin, the harder he presses him; he aims to get notes-of-hand from youths who have just donned the toga of manhood, and have stern fathers."

Whatever may be the good or bad taste of these poems, however effectual or ineffectual they may hove been in reforming the manners of the day, they did bring Horace into contact with other writers, notably Vergil, whom he later calls "the half of my soul." Through them he was presented to Maecenas, prime minister to Octavian (the later Emperor Augustus), who had heard of young Horace, just 26 at the time. The great man interviewed Horace briefly. Nine months later, after the poet had feared the meeting had been a fiasco, he sent for him, and extended him favor and patronage. This is the most critical single incident in the life of Horace.

Horace henceforth showed in his work an appreciation of the policies of the emperor, an acquaintance with the best literary and official society of the day, together with a mellowing warmth of expression in his second book of "Satires" and in his "Odes," a mellowness which reached perfection in his "Epistles" which were composed toward the close of his life. Much has been said for and against the qualities of the poems which Horace wrote as a poet laureate—such he became officially in 17 B. C., when he composed his "Secular Hymn" by imperial command—but one thing has never been questioned: Horace retained his freedom of spirit and body in spite of his allegiance to the court circle, a fact which honors emperor and poet alike.

Sometime in the early part of their friendship Maecenas gave Horace a farm in the Sabine Hills, not far from modern Tivoli (Tibur), in the valley of the Licenza. Here, alone or with company in the form of books or guests, Horace would come to free his mind and soul from the confusion of the city, as he walked about the acres of his five tenant farmers, or relaxed in the comfort of his 12-room house. The inspiration of much of his poetry can be traced directly to this retreat whither he hastened whenever he could—perhaps on his immortal bob-tailed mule.

Poet Was Enraptured By Rural Scenes.

Horace loved Italy, the beauty of her rivers, her hills, her vegetation, her skies. He says, "Me neither resolute Sparta nor the rich Larissaean plain so enraptures as the fane of echoing Albunea, the head-long Anio, the grove of Tibur, the orchards watered by the wandering rills." No one who has been to Tivoli can fail to appreciate those lines. He loved the winter—

O yonder see how clearly gleams Soracte, white with snow;
How the forest labors beneath its load,
Bowing to let it go;
And the streamlets, numbed by the piercing cold,
At length have ceased to flow.

He loved the spring—

Hard winter melts; the welcome spring again
Comes back, and in her train

* * * * * * * *

The meadows that but now were white with frost
Their pallid hues have lost.

* * * * * * * *

Now 'round the tresses that with unguents shine
Green myrtles we may twine,
Or flowers with which from icy fetters freed
Earth garnishes the mead.

He loved the simple country side—

And streams the while glide on with murmurs low,
And birds are singing 'mong the thickets deep,
And fountains babble, sparkling as they flow,
And from their noise invite to gentle sleep.

Equal to his love of nature is his love of man. Horace did not make friends readily; he studied men, he appreciated their follies and foibles. He had the disarming grace to mention his own. Mixed with his concern for the state (as Austin Dobson has turned it)—

Ship, to the roadstead rolled,
What dost thou?—O, once more
Regain the port. Behold!
Thy sides are bare of oar,
Thy tall mast wounded sore.

* * * * * * * *

Ship of State, before
A care, and now to me
A hope in my heart's core—
Tempt not the tyrant sea!

Is his interest in this life, tranquil, free from care, but ephemeral:

Pale death before them stalks impartially
Whether the portals be
Of peasant or of prince—hovel or tower
Alike all feel his power.
Oh happy Sestius! Life's little span

He Prophesied His Verse Would Be 'Enduring Monument.'

Forbids long hope to man;
Thy sunny day impending night invades

Much of Horace's philosophy is revealed in these lines—his belief in the finality of death, the vanity of worldly wealth, the need of seizing the day at hand, the power of fate.

In lighter vein is his picture of the canal passage on his trip with Vergil and Maecenas from Rome to Brindisi, described in his "Satires:"

Already night was beginning to draw her curtain over the earth and to sprinkle the sky with stars. Then slaves loudly rail at boatmen, boatmen at slaves: "Bring to here!" "You're packing in hundreds!" "Stay, that's enough!" What with collecting fares and harnessing the mule a whole hour slips away. Cursed gnats and frogs of the fens drive off sleep, the boatman, soaked in sour wine, singing the while of the girl he left behind and a passenger taking up the refrain. The passenger at last tires and falls asleep and the lazy boatman turns his mule out to graze, ties the reins to a stone * * *

And his inimitable lyrics of love by which he is best known to young and old alike. What insight in these words—

Now in the campus and the squares
At the appointed hour
Let gentle whispers oft be heard
From many a twilight bower,
Or the laugh of a lurking lass betray
The pledge of a ring or flower.

They were written by a prematurely grizzled bachelor of 40, rather rotund and short of stature, who describes himself as a "porker from the pen of Epicurus!" Horace had no real love affairs, in spite of such references as these:

Love, I have lived of late for these thy handmaids not all unmeet.
Yea, I have warred thy war, nor bitten the bitter bread of defeat.
Cometh war-weariness now and the woful wane of wild desire,
Cometh the leaving of arms, and the last long lingering lift of the lyre.

He is merely the astute observer again, reflecting life in his own person, in the manner of poets, not lovers.

Moral Obligation Was His Religion.

Religion in the strictest sense Horace neither practiced nor believed in, but he did believe in a great moral obligation on the part of men to live their lives well, to observe moderation in all ways, to give thought to better things, and he did conceive of some omnipotent guiding spirit of the universe, whether he calls it Jupiter, father of gods and men, or Fortune, who raises the lowly and levels the proud, or Providence, which protects the pure in heart and soul. Every one of these points is illustrated many times, but nowhere are they grouped together in more impressive form than in the so-called "Inaugural Odes," the first six of the third book.

There is something in Horace for everyone. A recent writer says: "The antiquarian in his secluded corner of the campus may examine the codices and, with an excited flutter of his academic gown, discover a new interpretation for some abstruse genitive. The writer of verse may well study the careful craftsman and acknowledge in the Sabine bard a distant forebear. The cultured mind may assimilate the suave and urbane manner, the sane and temperate outlook, the fine irony and subtle wit."

Horace Widely Imitated By Later Poets.

That is why there are more extant manuscripts of Horace than of any other classical author, why in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries something over 400 editions were produced, why in the eighteenth century alone another 400 appeared, and in the nineteenth more than 1200! That is why, too, Horace's works, especially his "Odes," have been translated into most western languages many times over. Thirty years ago the count revealed 90 translations of the complete "Odes" into English, 100 into French, 70 into German, 43 into Italian.

The effect of imitation, adoption, conscious or unconscious, upon poets of all countries can easily be surmised. Let me give just one concrete illustration taken from "Odes" III.i 37-40. The commonplace thought appears in English many times, e. g. in "Vanity Fair," in these words:

Old Dives there rolls in his chariot, but mind
Atra Cura is up with the lackeys behind.

In German, Goethe, who was not an unqualified admirer of Horace, says, "Sorge sie steiget mit dir zu Ross, sie steiget zu Schiffe;" and Boileau, in French, has, "Le chagrin monte en croupe et galope avec lui." Who can, or would, dispute the words of Meason in his "Anatomie of Poeticks," "He useth to indite but Common Places—quasi Communes Locos—this Barde of ours: wherefore it Falleth oute that what Poet soever looketh into Flaccus his boke heareth but his own Argument sette to his own proper Musick."

Horace the bard of nature, of city and country, of man and things, the artist of exquisite perfection in form, moral in tone, gentle in humor, mellow in reflection, shall never die. Men always have been, and always will be able to say with the characters in Shakespeare's "Titus Andronicus:"

Demetrius:
Non eget Mauri iaculis nec arcu.
Non eget Mauri iaculis nec arcu.
Chiron:
O, 'tis a verse in Horace; I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago.

Stratosphere Data Back New Theory of Life

Strange Germs Bagged by Aerialists on Recent Ascent.

"heat loving"—bacteria, which are practically always found in hot springs.

"We may consider it possible," declares Uphof, "that life in most cases will have to develop itself on many a globe at such high temperatures as are found at least in hot springs."

But more significant are the findings that the spores of a few bacteria are able to withstand even higher temperatures. You can boil these in water for some time and can't kill them. Even at temperatures above boiling, at 240 degrees F., they will live. And in dry heat some will survive temperatures of 284 degrees for a few minutes.

But even more remarkable is their resistance to cold. In recent years scientists have learned how to produce temperatures that reach 'way down to within a minute fraction of "absolute zero," which is in round figures 460 degrees F. below zero. The science of physics says no cold can be colder than this; it's absolutely the coldest temperature possible.

Now biologists and bacteriologists have subjected micro-organisms to low temperatures approaching this figure and have been unable to kill them.

This indicates that micro-organisms could well withstand the intense cold of interplanetary space, where the temperature has been figured to hover about one degree above absolute zero.

Center for these sub-zero studies has been the University of Leiden. And the investigations carried out there and elsewhere are pointed to by Uphof as supporting the idea of a possible distribution of life, from the earth as a center, throughout the universe.

In one cold-survival test a scientist named MacFayden subjected hog cholera and anthrax bacilli to a temperature of 202 degrees below zero for a period of one to seven days. Again at a temperature of 422 below. In both cases they weren't injured a bit. Typhoid bacteria was kept in liquid hydrogen at 424 degrees below zero. When brought back to normal temperature the bacteria awakened and were as virile as ever.

P. Gilbert Rahm, another scientist, studied the effect of cold upon certain microscopic animals which frequently occur on mosses, such as Nematodes. He placed moss in paper which he put in liquid helium at temperatures within two or three degrees of absolute zero for 7¾ hours. When the moss was later moistened with water the animals quickly came back to life.

Being minute and extremely light, these cold-resistant organisms can easily be taken to the upper atmosphere by the slightest air currents and whirlwinds. For the same reasons of minuteness and lightness, they remain in the atmosphere for considerable lengths of time.

"In the lower strata," states Uphof, "they will easily be returned to the surface of the earth by rains. In the upper air, however, there is no doubt they will remain for much longer periods, as there is less possibility they will be taken down by falling particles of water.

Trapping bacteria and determining their presence at higher altitudes has long engrossed scientists. The first person to do so appears to have been Louis Pasteur, who gave us pasteurization and protection against hydrophobia, or rabies. Writes his biographer, Valley-Radot: "Pasteur went on to Salins and climbed Mount Poupet, 850 meters above the sea level. Out of 20 vessels [to trap bacteria] opened, only five were altered. Pasteur would have liked to charter a balloon in order to prove that the higher you go, the fewer germs you find, and certain zones absolutely pure contain none at all."

But in modern times within the advent of the stratosphere balloon and airplane, spores and bacteria have been found at much higher altitudes than Pasteur reached. And it has been found that the altitude at which they were collected had apparently no influence on their ability to germinate.

"It is certain that micro-organisms will be found at much higher altitudes than heretofore encountered," Uphof declared recently. The Department of Agriculture findings in the "spore catchers" which Capts. Stevens and Anderson took aloft confirm this.

So with micro-organisms and bacteria present in the upper strata of the atmosphere, with their tremendous resistance to heat, cold and drought already proven in the laboratory, and meteors to the tune of 15 or 24 millions every 24 hours pelting the earth's atmosphere, why couldn't a few of these meteors snatch up a few bits of life and carry them off to some other worlds?

Even a study of meteors backs up the possibility. Scientists don't know exactly how fast meteors travel, but many of them move so fast that when they hit the earth's atmosphere the heat created by friction consumes them like so much flashlight powder. Investigators have calculated that some meteors reach a temperature of from 10,400 to 12,600 degrees. Obviously this would be too hot for any bacteria or spores. Organisms don't come that well insulated.

But there are some meteors that cruise along at only 9 miles a second, and these must have a low temperature, especially when traveling in higher strata of the atmosphere, where the cold is considerably more intense and the air is extremely thin—almost a vacuum. It is these relatively slow-moving and cold meteors which Uphof regards as the space ships which may carry life.

Meteors Are Described as Transport Ships of the Heavens.

He also considers it important that chemical analysis of meteorites reaching this planet have never been found to contain elements not found on earth. This, he says, shows that the bodies of the universe are made out of the same elements. Carbon, oxygen, nitrogen and hydrogen, elements which play an important role in life processes, as well as many other elements, have been found in meteors.

Uphof does not contend that all organisms can survive the journey to another world—only those possessing an unusual degree of resistance toward extremes already mentioned and probably toward certain "death rays"—powerful ultraviolet and cosmic rays—which they will have to withstand for very long periods of time. Only those which require little and can develop under primitive circumstances can hope for a happy journey.

Even then delivery isn't guaranteed. "Among millions of meteors that take up micro-organisms," says Uphof, "very few will be able to reach another planet where the conditions are such that they will be able to reproduce themselves. Even when a suitable planet has been reached, there is much chance that the organisms will be ruined when the meteor approaches with tremendous speed the foreign atmosphere, thus generating such a heat that all life will be destroyed. Like millions of spores, seeds and eggs which will never develop on our earth, due to unfavorable circumstances, so countless meteors will never be able to carry successfully life from one planet to another. It is but time that insures the result.

But when once meteor and planet make proper contact there will be planted a bit of life from the earth. Then the processes of evolution will get busy on it. From the single cell of life will develop, in the course of eons, many-celled living matter. A new flora and fauna will gradually be molded and shaped under the same biological laws and from the same elements as on our own planet, thus populating a new world. That's the theory, at any rate.

The plants and creatures of that new living world may not look at all like anything which exists here on earth. Physical and chemical conditions different from those here may have forced them to assume strange and fantastic forms in adapting themselves to their environment.

What surprises are in store for interplanatory travelers of the future!

SEC Battles With Utilities

execution and their one hope for full commutation of sentence lies with the courts. They accordingly have gone to the courts, and in such numbers that legal dockets are creaking under the load.

There are other angles to the Administration's power fight that are not necessarily concerned with the utilities act, but are nevertheless vital to the future operation of private utility systems. The Tennessee Valley Authority's right to acquire transmission lines for sale of power to municipalities now is nearing a Supreme Court test. James M. Beck, constitutional lawyer and member of the American Liberty League, sees in the TVA power development a trend toward "national collectivism" that may lead to an "economic revolution," and so told the court last week in a brief.

Meanwhile Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, who fathered the TVA, is preparing legislation that would carry Government competition with private utilities into other large river basins.

And the utility war in Congress goes on. Congressional committees which launched an investigation of utility lobbying last session in Senate and House are about ready to resume, loaded with ammunition it has taken fall and summer to collect.

Chairman John J. O'Connor, of the House Rules Committee, is chasing the once "missing" Howard C. Hopson, of Associated Gas & Electric, again, and it looks for all the world like old times.

And the Administration still is stalking big game, only in this case the game is mighty big, has a pretty tough hide, and also plenty of reserve stamina for a fight that apparently hasn't hardly started.

NRA Lessons To Be Studied At Conference

Despite Blue Eagle's Failure Experiment Had Value.

periences learned under the NIRA was the hopelessness of centralized control in a democratic state, and in this the experiences of the industrialists themselves were more enlightening than those of the Administration. The "code authorities," elected by the industries, set themselves up largely in New York, Chicago and Washington, with central offices for filing prices, compiling statistics, and collecting assessments, only to find that a small manufacturer in Texas will not be ruled by a trade association "expert" in New York, or a small lumberman in Georgia will resent the rule of a big Western timberman.

* * * *

APPROVAL of the code for the electrical industry, code No. 4, on August 4, 1933, gave a precedent for a reign of chaos over jurisdictional boundaries. The industry is characteristic of all American industries, a few companies producing the bulk of the products, numerous small firms producing the same products, and thousands of concerns in other industries devoting part of their productive capacity to the products of this industry. The letter of transmittal admitted this lack of jurisdictional control. This code was followed by hundreds of others criss-crossing in unfathomable jurisdictional lines.

Later, it was found that it was easy for a code violator to slip from the jurisdiction of one industry to another to escape penalties. Or, if he could not find a more favorable resting place, he could claim no code jurisdiction at all. Trade association secretaries were particularly active in claiming broad jurisdiction for the collection of assessments, and their demands on companies for code fees more than anything else caused widespread rebellion against the industrial rule of code authorities. One manufacturer complained that he was harassed by 84 different code authorities.

NRA Wrongly Blamed.

Code authorities were made up of industries and business men, not Government officials. Yet their actions were attributed to the Government, and the Administration had to bear the brunt of blame for their errors. NRA was blamed for all the petty regulations set up by trade association groups, for the attempts to collect fees, for innumerable questionnaires sent to individual companies, for code inquisitorial committees that assumed at times almost the attitude of courts.

Long before the Schechter decision it was apparent that the codes had set up a system of almost feudal industrial governments that were at variance with our democratic form of government. The codes for the distribution trades had broken down completely, and thousands of retailers and wholesalers throughout the country were in open rebellion against the dictatorship of the associations. Distribution was claimed by the manufacturing codes, by the wholesale, and by the retail codes, some claiming by product, some by place of business, and some by method of sale.

The code system became a gigantic Frankenstein monster. My May 27, 1935, 14,000 orders, each with the force of law, had been signed to grant exceptions and exemptions from codes, four of these orders practically wiping out the heart of the distribution codes. Thousands of retailers went their own way with impunity, without going through the formality of asking for exemptions, because it was often apparent that public sentiment would not have supported the coercive trade measures and the demands for fees.

Laws Unrepresentative.

WHEN we wanted automobile traffic laws in our States we did not call in the automobile drivers and ask them to write the laws to suit themselves. They were written by lawmaking representatives of the public as a whole. The industrial laws written by industry alone under Setcion 3(a) of NIRA did not work because they did not represent the democratic expressions of the whole people concerned with industry. Experience under NRA showed conclusively that industry means labor as well as management, and that neither alone can "speak for industry." Six great lessons learned from NRA may be stated as follows:

1. No industrial laws are possible without established definitions of industries fixed by law and subject to change only by a formal act of Congress.
2. Industrial supervision must be regional or by States. Centralization is as undemocratic in industry as it is politically.
3. Court procedure of every kind must be divorced from the industrial administrative units and left to local courts.
4. Trade practice laws cannot be applied through codes to one group or class of business. To be effective they must be formulated as laws, applicable to the product to be protected regardless of who sells it.
5. Private citizens cannot supervise public laws at their own discretion. Boards, commissions, or "authorities" must be sworn-in public officials during the period of public work.
6. One branch of industry alone cannot sponsor laws in a democracy. Industry has four vital elements: capital, management, labor, and the consuming public, no one of which alone can be granted full power over industry.

Newspaper Women's Party Will Be Held Saturday

Mrs. Roosevelt to Entertain at Annual Affair; Gridiron Club Program for President Will Take Place at Same Time.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The official season will open Wednesday evening, when the President and Mrs. Roosevelt entertain at the first state function of the season, the dinner in honor of the members of the Cabinet and their wives. The announcement of the official schedule of White House entertaining was made several weeks ago, and Capital hostesses were able to plan their formal entertaining. Until the dates of state dinners and state receptions are made known, hostesses hesitate to send out their invitations. In Washington, cards to large dinners, as well as receptions, balls and musicales are issued as far in advance of the date as two months, so filled is the social calendar, and until the White House announces its dates there is always a chance that a Capital hostess will find herself minus a number of her most prominent guests at the last minute.

The Cabinet dinner is a custom from the earliest days of this Government, although in post-Revolutionary days it was a midday function, rather than the brilliant and formal affair of today. The Vice President always was invited to the Cabinet dinner, until, during the Hoover Administration, the Vice Presidential dinner was inaugurated to settle the dispute as to the position of Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, sister of Mr. Charles Curtis, Vice President in that regime.

Musicales Follow Dinners.

It has been the custom for some years for the Chief Executive and First Lady to invite a number of additional guests to the musicales which have followed state dinners, and President and Mrs. Roosevelt, adhering to this tradition, always have some brilliant artist or artists to entertain after the dinners.

Although the lists for the state receptions are smaller than they were several years ago, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt include everybody on the White House social and official lists in some function. They even hold small receptions after large dinners and invitations to these are considered as signal an honor as those to the larger state receptions.

There is again regret that the official calendar makes no mention of one of the most historic functions on the schedule, that of the New Year's Day reception, when the President and First Lady formally receive the official and diplomatic world and later the public. The custom was established by George Washington when official ranks were much smaller than at present. It also has been the custom of the Secretary of State to entertain the members of officialdom at a breakfast after the morning reception at the White House. The latter custom was started many years ago when the Secretary of State entertained in his home and the prominent people who gathered there remained through the early afternoon and then parted to prepare for the annual New Year's afternoon calls on other members of the Cabinet.

Until the present Administration, each member of the Cabinet entertained for the President at large and brilliant dinners. During the regime of President Roosevelt, one large dinner has been given for the Chief Executive by all the other members of the Cabinet. It was President Woodrow Wilson who asked that outside guests be invited to these dinners, and it is recalled that until then the President and his wife met the same group of guests every Tuesday night in the Cabinet-dinner-giving season, and at that time there was only one outstanding caterer in Washington and thus the President was apt to be invited not only to meet the same people, but to eat the same kind of food year after year at these dinners.

The President rarely dines outside the White House when in Washington, and when he does, these occasions are unannounced. President and Mrs. Hoover dined frequently with Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fisk Stone, who were among their closest friends, and President Taft broke every precedent in regard to informal dining out, for he went to many private parties, and once shocked some of the personages of Capital society by attending a dinner at the German Embassy in honor of the birthday anniversary of the Kaiser. In those days there seemed to be a hard and fast rule against a President of the United States stepping on foreign soil and, of course, the embassy of any nation here is considered foreign territory.

At the state dinners there will be two kinds of wines, red and white, of a domestic variety. The beautiful glassware purchased for the White House through arrangement of Mrs. Benjamin Harrison will again be in use, or at least a part of the extensive sets. New wine glasses have been purchased since that time to fill out the number needed for large dinners, such as the diplomatic, where the Harrison glasses for 92 persons are not sufficient. These glasses include enough to serve five kinds of wine as well as mineral water. There are goblets of green and white for rhine wines, red glass for sherry and claret and clear crystal for champagne. President and Mrs. Roosevelt are the first White House hosts to serve wines at state dinners since the administration of Woodrow Wilson, and even during that regime came not only the war, but sorrow, illness and the absence of any formal entertaining. After that was the dry era, when Calvin Coolidge banished all refreshments from the evening receptions. The present mistress of the White House, reviving Dolly Madison's statement, has said she could not allow anyone to enter her house without offering some simple refreshment.

Prohibition Issue Arises.

It was with the arrival of Rutherford B. Hayes, in 1877, that the prohibition issue reached the White House, and added to the gallery of First Ladies the portrait of Mrs. Hayes in maroon velvet, the gift to the Nation of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. It still hangs in the lower corridor where guests leave their wraps at formal evening parties.

Mrs. Hayes, "Lemonade Lucy" as she was called by her enemies, was a "White Ribboner," and with the sympathy of the President, she put her principles into action. Only once during her regime was an alcoholic beverage served in the White House. This was at a state dinner in honor of Grand Duke Alexis Alexandrovitch of Russia, on April 19, 1877, when wine was served by special request from the State Department.

Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain Saturday at the annual party she gives for the "ladies of the Fourth Estate" on the evening when members of the Gridiron Club are feting the President. The party is always gay and amusing, but what happens is strictly off the record and is the Americans on the Continent

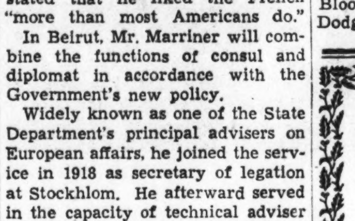
By Andre Vulliet.
Special Correspondent of The Post.

Paris.

Among the many changes effected by the United States State Department recently in the diplomatic service, one of the most important is J. Theodore Marriner's transfer to the post of Consul General in Beirut, Syria. Widely known in Europe, he had especially endeared himself to the French owing to his flawless knowledge of the language. All Frenchmen like to hear a "foreigner" speak a la Francaise. Mr. Marriner did just that. French being the official language of Syria, Mr. Marriner should have no trouble getting along there.

Delicate situations can arise from an imperfect knowledge of a language when international good-will is at stake. We remember the mild flurry created in Franco-American diplomatic circles in the spring of 1934 when French newspapers reported Mr. Marriner as saying in an interview "that he liked the French more than most Americans." The enterprising young French reporter who had cabled this startling statement was still all puffed up with professional pride when another cable came in from Mr. Marriner saying that his meaning had been distorted. He had merely stated that he liked the French "more than most Americans do."



In Beirut, Mr. Marriner will combine the functions of consul and diplomat in accordance with the Government's new policy.

Widely known as one of the State Department's principal advisers on European affairs, he joined the service in 1918 as secretary of legation at Stockhlom. He afterward served in the capacity of technical adviser of the first session of the special commission for the preparation of a draft convention on the manufacture of arms in 1927, and as secretary of the American delegation of the third session of the Preparatory Disarmament Commission. He was one of the leading negotiators of the Kellogg-Briand pact in 1928 and adviser to the London Naval Conference in 1930. Appointed Counselor of the American Embassy on April 1, 1931, he ranked next to the ambassador, and was at various times American charge d'affaires here during the past years.

Toward the end of the war there were only five women left in Bailleul, France, trained in the art of valenciennes lace making. Faced with the total disappearance of this important industry, the town appealed to the "Retour au Foyer" organization for help. Mr. William Nelson Cromwell, well-known American philanthropist, and at the time vice president of this movement, took up the battle. Although actively engaged in reconstruction work of his own, he contributed important financial support toward the establishment of a school to teach this art to young girls. Today over 500 of them are engaged in valenciennes lace making.

To show its appreciation for his work, the municipal council of Bailleul has made him citizen of the town and a bust has been fittingly placed in the public square at the entrance of the lacemaking school This bust is a copy of the one by Segofin, which stands in the Legion of Honor Building in Paris.

Mr. Cromwell, incidentally, is one of the two Americans who are grand officers of the Legion of Honor. The other is Mr. Edward Tuck, of Malmaison. He is a nonagenarian and honorary citizen of Paris. The philanthropist, who is also in his nineties, is at present in New York and was represented at the Bailleul ceremony by his agent, Emile Chartier.

In May, the school started by Mr. Cromwell was awarded the Grand Prix for lacemaking at the International Exhibition at Brussels.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt will join the ranks of Presidential grandfathers who have played Santa Claus in the White House for their children's children.

With the arrival of Sistie and Buzzie Dall, the children of Mrs. John Boettiger for the Yuletide, the President will put aside official cares for the nonce to concentrate on the big issues of the holidays "how to make the children happy at Christmas time."

The stately corridors of the White House will echo to the merry music of childish voices shouting delight at the contents of bulging stockings and a gorgeous Christmas tree arranged under the personal supervision of grandfather himself. And in the merriment of present-day Presidential grandchildren will be heard echoes from little children of yesterday who too found the joys of St. Nicholas within these historic precincts.

Perhaps stories will be told by the older attaches of White House children and Christmases in administrations other than the present one. There are people in Washington who remember still the gaunt figure of Abraham Lincoln bending over trays of tin soldiers in the famous toy shop on New York avenue and picking out a new army of make-believe soldiers for little Tad Lincoln.

When Lincoln first entered the White House there were two little Lincoln boys, Willie and Tad, for whom to select Christmas gifts. In the darkness of Civil War days, the White House became even gloomier when little Willie died and Tad was left alone—with his heart-weary father—for companionship.

President Andrew Johnson had a host of grandchildren for whom to arrange a White House Christmas. There were five of them, and the favorite game was to play Indian, whooping up and down the halls, often the grandfather in hot pursuit of the mischief-makers, but yelling war cries just as loud as any of them.

Perhaps the merriest of all Christmases in the White House were passed by the children of President Theodore Roosevelt. There were no grandchildren in those days, of course, but Theodore, jr., Kermit, Archibald and Quentin Roosevelt and the subdebutante half sister, Alice Roosevelt, now Mrs. Longworth, knew how to get the most out of Christmas, Santa Claus and the thousand and one delights of the children's big festival.

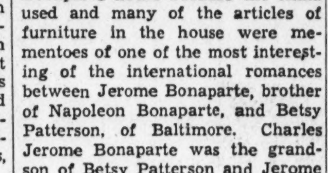
Fortunately, we have a picture of a White House Christmas during the first Roosevelt regime from the pen of President Theodore Roosevelt himself. In a letter he wrote from the White House to James A. Garfield, then a young boy, grandson of President Garfield, the President gave a vivid description of the joys of that Christmas. It is preserved in a book entitled "Theodore Roosevelt's Letters to His Children," published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. It began:

"White House, December 26, 1902.

"Jimmikins:

"Among all the presents I got I don't think there was one I appreciated more than yours; for I was brought up to admire and respect your grandfather, and I have a very great fondness and esteem for your father. It always seems to me as if you children were being brought up the way that mine are. Yesterday Archie got among his presents a small rifle from me and a pair of riding boots from his mother. He won't be able to use the rifle until next summer, but he has gone off very happy in the riding boots for a ride on the calico pony, Algonquin, the one you rode the other day. Yesterday morning at 6:45 all the children were up and dressed and began to hammer at the door of their mother's and my room, in which their six stockings, all bulging out with queer angles and rotundities, were hanging from the fireplace. So their mother and I got up, shut the window, lit the fire, taking down the stockings, of course, put on our wrappers and prepared to admit the children. But first there was a surprise for me, also for their good mother, for Archie had a little Christmas tree of his own which he had rigged up with the help of one of the carpenters in a big closet; and we all had to look at the tree and each of us got a present off of it. There was also one present each for Jack the dog, Tom Quartz the kitten, and Algonquin the pony, whom Archie no more would think of neglecting than I would neglect his brothers and sisters. Then all the children into our bed and there they opened their stockings. Afterwards we got dressed and took breakfast, and then all went into the library, where each child had a table set for his bigger presents. Quentin had a perfectly delightful electric railroad, which had been rigged up for him by one of his friends, the White House electrician who has been very good to all the children. Then Ted and I, with Gen. Wood and Mr. Bob Ferguson, who was a lieutenant in my regiment, went for a three hours' ride; and all of us, including all the children, took lunch at the house with the children's aunt, Mrs. Capt. Cowles—Archie and Quentin having their lunch at a little table with their cousin, Sheffield. Late in the afternoon I played at single stick with Gen. Wood and Mr. Ferguson. I am going to get your father to come on and try it soon. We have to try to hit as light as possible, but sometimes we hit hard, and today I have a bump over one eye and a swollen wrist. Then all our family and kinfolk and Senator and Mrs. Lodge's family and kinsfolk had our Christmas dinner at the White House, and afterwards danced in the East room, closing up with the Virginia reel."

In the New National Museum reclines a doll dressed by Mrs. John Quincy Adams for one of her granddaughters at one White House Christmas.



When the late Charles J. Bonaparte, of Baltimore, was Secretary of the Navy in the Theodore Roosevelt Administration zest was added to the dinners and receptions at the Bonaparte house because the china used and many of the articles of furniture in the house were mementoes of one of the most interesting of the international romances between Jerome Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon Bonaparte, and Betsy Patterson, of Baltimore. Charles Jerome Bonaparte was the grandson of Betsy Patterson and Jerome Bonaparte. The 191-piece china service Jerome Bonaparte presented to Betsy Patterson has been reassembled mostly through the efforts of Mrs. Andrew Robeson, of Newport, R. I., a great-granddaughter of Betsy Patterson's brother, and has been placed on display at the Maryland Historical Society in Baltimore. Portraits of the Bonaparte family, early Roman history and love scenes and a cup and saucer set with months of the year and the signs of the zodiac are interesting from a collector's point of view.

That reminds us that many fair ladies have handed down to their descendants long white gloves painted with the miniatures of the Marquis de Lafayette. On his various tours of this country the Marquis brought these tokens and took this way of paying off bets on horse races when his opponents were members of the fair sex.

When Charles Dickens came here, he had a unique way of sending one of his own gloves as a token of greeting and friendship to those whose hospitality he had enjoyed. He ran short of left-handed gloves, the proper ones for this little courtesy, and, so tradition relates, sent right-handed ones with the explanation that he was offering the right hand of fellowship. The left ones were supposed to be those nearest to his heart.

Last year Mrs. Roosevelt invited her guests to come in costume, and masked, probably the first time in history that there has been a masked party in the White House. It was a great success and prizes were offered for the cleverest costumes. This year the invitation includes a small card which informs the guests that costume is optional, as they are to be the audience. Which means that there will be private entertainment. Last year everybody did some "stunt," either impromptu or rehearsed.

Thousands Spent in Beauty Quest Virtually Wasted Without Proper Amount of Rest

"THE SLEEPING BEAUTY was smart," says lovely Jean Muir of filmdom, "for the most important aid to beauty is sleep." An unvarying number of hours' sleep each night will restore radiance to any individual.

Posture Taken in Sleep Determines Its Benefits

Early to Bed Still Regarded as Good Rule; Body Should Be Stretched Out With Arms at Sides to Accomplish Complete Relaxation.

By Gertrude Hummer.

SLEEP, THE FOUNDATION of all beauty and charm, is one of the finest beauty aids in the world. Women spend thousands of dollars each year in the quest for beauty, yet omit the one thing that costs precisely nothing and does repair work that is priceless.

Insufficient sleep shows in tired lines about the eyes and mouth and forehead, taut nerves, in lustreless hair and sluggish, lifeless skin.

Really restful, energizing sleep on the other hand repairs worn down tissues and shattered nerves. It acts as a battery charger.

Nowadays it's very easy to get into the habit of too little sleep. There's a grand party that "just can't be missed." The latest novel can't be laid aside until finished.

An after awhile the body becomes so accustomed to too little sleep that it adjusts itself accordingly.

There are, apparently, no ill effects. You think everything is all right. How often have you heard people boast that "they can get along on six hours' sleep?" Sure they can for a while. But eventually insufficient sleep will affect their health.

The amount of sleep required by a woman depends upon her activities and temperament. Any good physician can estimate the minimum number of hours of sleep you may need to keep in the best mental and physical condition. Certain high-strung types consume more nervous energy in a given time than others. These are the persons who need eight or even ten hours of sleep out of every 24. The placid person may get along all right on less.

Women Cautioned.

Women, especially, should, as a rule, get at least 8 hours sleep every night. And if they miss some night, they should make it up the following night.

The three most important factors that invite natural, profitable sleep are first, early hours; second, an abundance of fresh air and third, peace of mind. You should retire before midnight because the hours of sleep you get then do you more good than those you get after midnight.

The necessity of plenty of fresh air is demonstrated by the great number of sick people that are made well each year by sleeping out of doors. Oxygen is life. Often distracting thoughts carried to bed with us make sleep restless and broken.

Next consider the character of your bed coverings and the position of your body. Heavy clothing interferes with the proper ventilation of your skin and breathing, and results in a feeling of sluggishness and stupidity on awakening.

One of the loveliest and most versatile of our modern actresses, Jean Muir, says: "My first and most important beauty rite is early retiring. Of course, I have other beauty secrets which I follow religiously, but I have discovered that none of them fully achieve its purpose unless I have had my full quota of sleep." This particular young woman requires nine hours sleep a night.

The body of the average woman in sleep is thrown into positions which cramp the muscles and press on the nerves. Therefore, you should, when lying down to sleep, fully stretch your body, with your arms lying loosely at either side. Your arms should never be crossed or thrown above your head or folded over your chest. You should lie on your abdomen or on the right or left side. Your head should rest a few inches higher than your shoulders and your body should be completely relaxed.

As sleep is as necessary to life as fresh air and food, more thought should be given the subject. The adolescent, particularly, should regulate the hours of sleep for health and lasting beauty.

Try retiring at an early hour for a week and notice the new brightness of your eyes, the lustre to your hair, the fresh, glowing look about your skin.

Closet Doors May Serve Two Purposes in Home

Doors are a necessity, of course, but closet doors may serve a double purpose. Shelves may be built on them wide enough to care for the smaller pieces of household linen—guest towels, napkins, face cloths. The bottom shelves may be pegged to care for shoes.

HALF of the fun of Christmas is the bright wrappings and the decorations. If you want some novel ideas about wrapping gifts, send for all sorts of different people a stamped self-addressed envelope for Elizabeth MacRae Boykin's bulletin "Gay Ways to Wrap Christmas Gifts." POEMS Out of the Past

A Farewell

My fairest child, I have no song to give you;
No lark could pipe to skies so dull and gray:
Yet, if you will, one quiet hint I'll leave you
For every day.

I'll tell you how to sing a clearer carol
Than the lark who hails the dawn on breezy down;
To earn yourself a purer poet's laurel
Than Shakespeare's crown.

Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever;
Do noble things, not dream them, all day long:
And so make Life and Death, and that For Ever
One grand sweet song.

—Charles Kingsley (1819-1875).

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Please state whether long gloves are proper accessories for a reception and ball, and, if so, under what circumstances they should be removed. I would appreciate an outline of receiving-line etiquette. Thank you. DAISY.

Proper Social Usage.

DEAR DAISY: In wearing long gloves with her sleeveless, decollete evening gown a woman is subscribing to best social usage when dressing for a formal evening event, such as the reception and ball you suggest. However, it has become largely a matter of personal preference with the individual woman whether she does or doesn't wear long gloves to such evening events nowadays. It might almost be said as many women are seen without long gloves as with them. When worn, they should be removed entirely at the supper hour. This is to be preferred to unbuttoning them at the wrist and tucking the hand-covering into the cuff.

When you emerge from the dressing room, ready to pass down the length of the receiving line, you give your name, low-spoken but distinctly enunciated, to the butler or other servitor who is announcing arrivals to the hostess. If it is a public reception, you may be expected to advance upon the receiving line and announce yourself to the person who heads it.

Nothing more is required of you than a "good evening," and an exchange of handclasps with each person in line, providing members of the receiving line are greeting the guests with a cordial handclasp. In some instances, where the company is very large indeed, members of the receiving line may elect to dispense with the handclasp in favor of a bow.

As handclasp or bow is exchanged, such greetings as "So glad to see you, Miss Blank," or "Good evening, Miss Blank," or even, "How do you do, Miss Blank," are most frequently heard. If you happen to have a close friend in the receiving line, you will probably tell her how well she is looking; but you will not hold up the procession of guests even for a moment by attempting to engage her in so much as the shortest conversation. If you want to talk wtih her at all, you will make a point of seeking her out later in the evening when the reception line has dissolved to mingle with the company.

• • • •

Your manner should be composed and pleasant; your progress along the line leisurely but unhesitant; your greetings and responses clearly and simply voiced. In greeting each person be sure to pronounce the name correctly, and to gaze directly at the person spoken to. M. H.

Need for Water Varies Greatly With Individuals

Some Take as Little as 25 Ounces a Day While Others Drink 100.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

PEOPLE do uncomfortable things just because they get the notion that they should. There are individuals who believe that the habit of eating less food than the appetite craves, drinking less water than the thirst dictates, restraining the impulse to run and jump, to shout or laugh, is either virtuous, wise, or conducive to health.

On the other hand, the body cannot function without a controlling mechanism any more than a steam engine will perform smoothly and continuously without a governor which regulates the flow of steam into the piston chambers. We can eat too much, drink too much water, over exercise, or allow our emotions to run riot. So that we shall not exhaust the body we are supplied with many sorts of governors or regulators.

People vary greatly in the amount of water they use each day. Some take as little as 25 ounces of fluids as such; others, 100 ounces or more. We may not realize that 90 per cent of the food we eat is water; in fact some animals can get along entirely without water except that which is obtained from the consumption of water laden vegetables. Every housewife knows that spinach is best cooked in its own water. With the average diet we take in 40 to 50 ounces of water daily.

How does the body lose water? As a rule we can disregard the water lost via the gastro-intestinal tract unless there is diarrhea or vomiting. We excrete most of our water through evaporation from the skin and the lungs and as urine. The skin and the lungs take care of 25 to 50 ounces daily and the kidneys, if normal, handle the balance. In heart disease, when an insufficient amount of blood reaches the kidneys, much skill on the part of the physician is required. It is then necessary to adjust the water balance in such a way that undue load shall not be placed upon the heart or upon damaged kidney tissue. Naturally, the patient with a temperature of from 100 to 102 degrees F. will evaporate from the skin and the lungs 25 to 50 per cent more water than normal. If the temperature is continuous—with but few remissions—the water loss from this source may be as much as 100 per cent greater.

We must appreciate that water is as essential to the body as is food. Too much or too little may endanger life. On the whole, normal thirst provides an instinctive safeguard. We must recall, however, that as age advances arteries become less elastic and hence are unable to distribute properly excess quantities of fluid.

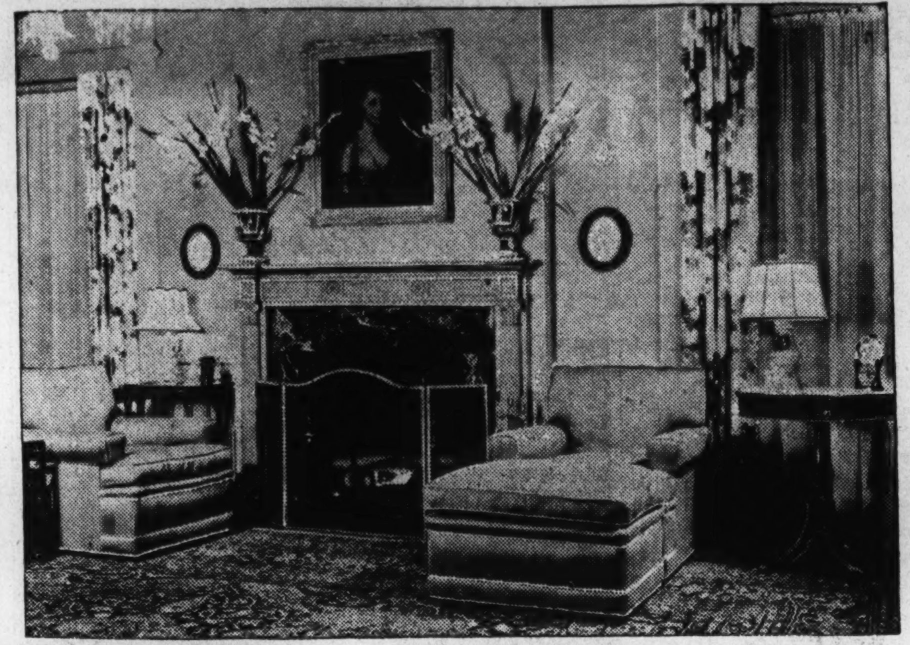
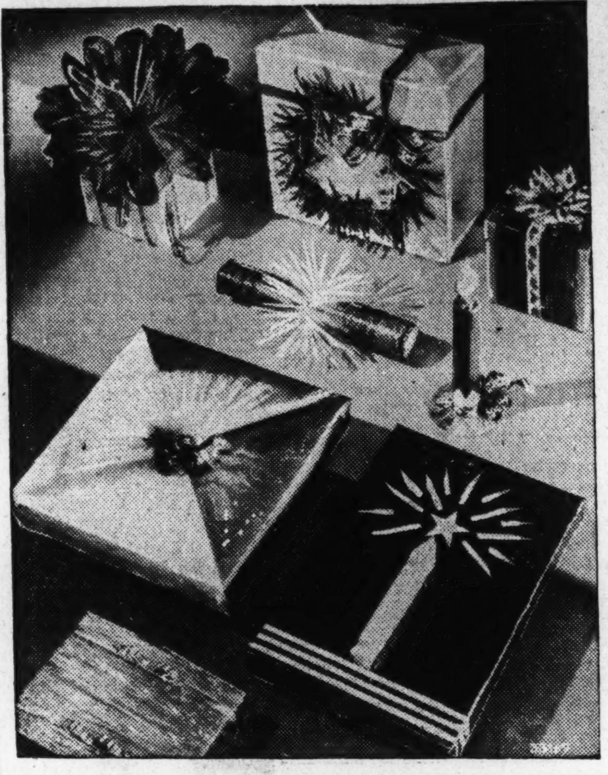
From Seventeen to Seventy, Women Adore "Home" Gifts

THE PICTURE at the right, carefully studied, should give puzzled husbands, brothers and anxious admirers several ideas as to what would be a welcome Christmas gift for the lady in the case . . . a pair of lovely vases for a mantel; a pair of interesting oval pictures, handsome lamps, a beautiful rug, occasional tables, easy chairs or a big fat hassock, and let him who wishes to tie up his gift in the brightest way study the layout below, or send for Miss Boykin's bulletin on "Gay Ways to Wrap Christmas Gifts for Special Individuals."





Ideas Help Men to Shop For Gifts to Suit Women

Things for the Home Are Safest Because They Are Always Pleasing Even Though Not Needed by Feminine Recipient.

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

YOU CAN GIVE a man the world's worst necktie and he'll probably be as sweet as heaven about it and think you are a darling to have selected it all by your nice little self.

But a lady is likely to dissolve in tears if she gets the wrong thing. So today we're letting puzzled husbands, brothers and friends in on the type of gift a lady covets for herself on her treks through the stores.

They're home gifts—because that's a safe kind. For all the sophistocated novels you read, most women are pretty domestic souls, jobs or no jobs. So you can't go far wrong on something she can use when she is in her most becoming role of hostess and lady at home—whether she's 17 or 70.

Jelly Jar Suggested.

If she has a pretty house, give niceties for the breakfast table . . . a pretty little jelly jar with a serving spoon to match . . . a bright set of egg cups . . . a breakfast cloth and napkins in a sunny color . . . berry spoons to match her silver pattern . . . a set of fruit juice glasses . . . something electrical that she doesn't have . . . a dainty holder for a few early morning blossoms from the garden.

Fancier linens than she'd buy for herself are always acceptable . . . a pair of linen sheets with her monogram embroidered on the hems . . . a very grand bath towel set with mat and wash cloth all done up in a gift package . . . fingertip or lipstick towels . . . the most frivolous of absurd little refreshment napkins in jaunty colors . . . embroidered linen coasters to protect cherished tables . . . a doilie set for the table with napkins to match.

Armchair Suitable.

Very practical ideas include a pair of handsome straight chairs in the same style as her other furniture . . . an armchair in a covering to match her other colors . . . extra special material in the right length for new curtains in her favorite room . . . Venetian blinds for the windows . . . a nest of little occasional tables . . . a larger side table . . . a lamp . . . a chaise longue . . . a desk for herself . a dressing table with a petticoat to go with her bedspread . . a pretty scatter rug for her bedroom.

Flowers that bloom in the florists' windows usually come with young men's cards attached. So the girl with a job will appreciate a worthy vase or flower bowl. The next step is candlelight because a girl is at her best in its flattering glow so give her some candlesticks. And the more modern she is, the more enchanting she will look behind a tea pot, and that's why a tea set will be welcome for intimate gatherings.

Her housekeeping is done rather on the fly . . . give her a small clothesline with clothespins all done up in a flowered cretonne bag you can make yourself . . . electrical cooking appliances that will give her a chance to show off her domestic accomplishments . . . a set of square plates for informal entertaining . . . buffet table accessories . . . some especially nice picture frames for specially nice friends.

If she's a lavendar-and-lace lady she'll appreciate . . . a silver or crystal bowl with tongs for nuts, candied fruits or mints for little treats . . . a vase to hold the flowers they bring . . . a quaint little tea set for twosomes and threesomes of an afternoon . . . a leather letter kit for stationery that she can use on her lap for writing her invitations and thankyou's . . . a charming covered box for keep-sakes that she likes to get out to show special friends and relations.

Mat for Gardening.

When she putters in the garden, she'll like . . . a garden mat to make weeding and transplanting easier on her knees . . . a gay little watering can . . . bright markers for her different seedling plots . . . a folding stool to move around the garden . . . garden shears . . . garden gloves.

For tranquil hours . . . a rocking chair in a charming design . . . a lamp to give just the right illumination for her work . . . a little mahogany sewing stand to hold knitting, sewing or books . . . a pretty little string holder for the little pieces of string a grandmother likes to hoard.

Then—if you would wrap your gifts in striking individual packages, send a stamped self addressed envelope to The Post for my new bulletin "Gay Ways To Wrap Christmas Gifts."

Scenery of Landscape Gives Illusion of Space

Walls virtually expand when they are intelligently decorated. A door or a panel in a small hall may have a landscape scene painted on it. With the proper perspective this gives the appearance of distance and space, and makes the tiny hall look twice as spacious.

Revival of Sachets Something to Cheer

THE revival of sachets is something to cheer about. For a long time it has been difficult to get sachets of one's pet perfume, but lately the perfumers have opened their hearts and in some instances offer not only the scented powder but also the most entrancing silk sachets already made up. Some of these sachets are destined to dangle from your clothes hangers, while others are to tuck in among linens and lingerie.

It is not necessary to use only sachets that match your perfume. That would be difficult nowadays, when women are perfume collectors and like to have enough variety so that no one scent can lose its effectiveness through sheer monotony. But you must use fragrances that blend well.

Crown Roast of Pork Is Ideal for Holiday Dinner

Nothing Can Compare With It for Its Sweet Savor.

By Dorothea Duncan.

FOR SWEET savor there is nothing that can compare with a crown roast of pork. It is a dish which you may serve for the special dinner and is especially appropriate for the holiday dinner.

The crown roast of pork is made from the pork loin section, sometimes known as the pork chop section. Two loin sections are used and shaped into a crown with the ribs pointing upward and outward. The meat is removed from the ends of the rib bones, and when ready to serve, paper frills are placed over the rib ends, making handles which the carver often appreciates.

The crown of pork is prepared in exactly the same way as any other pork roast. It is placed on a rack in an open roasting pan and roasted at a low temperature. No water is added, nor is the pan covered. Approximately 30 minutes per pound is allowed for roasting pork in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.).

If stuffings are traditional for the holidays in your family, you may live up to that tradition with a crown roast of pork. Just stuff the crown before you roast it. In this case, the crown must be placed right side up in the roasting pan, and when placed in this manner it is necessary to wrap the rib ends with salt pork or bacon to prevent charring. If no dressing is used, the crown may be turned upside down, thus making such a precaution unnecessary, since as the meat cooks the fat drips down and keeps the unprotected bones moist.

There is a host of holiday stuffings, but none of them is better than the prune dressing used with the illustrated roast. Here is the way it is prepared:

Prune Dressing.

1 cup prunes
2 cups bread crumbs
1 medium sized onion, finely cut
1 cup diced celery
¼ cup green pepper, finely chopped
1 cup meat stock
Salt and pepper.

Directions on Cooking.

Cook the prunes in water until tender, then drain and cut into small pieces, removing the pits. Add the bread crumbs, onion, celery and green pepper. Season with salt and pepper and moisten with meat stock.

Since apples always have been a favorite accompaniment for pork, the crown roast may be garnished with apple slices which have been simmered and glazed in a sirup.

Meat Is Prepared on a Rack and Roasted in an Open Pan.

There should be one apple slice for each serving of pork.

If the apples are not used as a garnish and accompaniment for the meat, surround the roast on the platter with sprigs of fresh parsley and serve each portion with a few tablespoons of the following sauce:

Wash prunes and cover with hot water. Soak overnight, or until soft. Drain and cover with sweet cider, allowing 4 tablespoons sugar, 12 cloves and one-fourth teaspoon of ground cinnamon to each cup of cider. Cook ten minutes. When a hot roast is served this sauce may be served warm. The sauce is also excellent when served cold over cold slices of roast pork or baked ham.

FOR sweet savor, nothing can compare with a crown roast of pork. Stuffed with prune dressing and surrounded with an edible garnish of baked apple rings, topped with stlil more prunes, it deserves serious consideration as the main course of a holiday dinner.

WHO wouldn't rebel at the tradition which marks turkey or goose as the favorite Christmas holiday meat, once he had tasted such lusciousness as that afforded by the crown roast of pork. Paper frills placed over the rib ends please the carver.

Smart Mother Will Start Early To Train Her Child Emotionally

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

AS MRS. X LEFT the house, the baby, who was a year old and beginning to take notice and express itself on a few subjects, set up a heart-broken wail and would not be comforted. Mrs. X gave it a final good-by kiss, not emotionally, but in a matter-of-fact way, and walked out, closing the door firmly behind her and never looking back to see or hear what was going on.

Her friend, Mrs. Y, was horrified. "My dear, how can you be so heartless? Why, it used to break my heart to leave them, and sometimes it was half an hour before I could get away. Even so, I did not really enjoy myself, and would telephone home a dozen times to see if they were all right and happy again. It is the happiest time of your life when they are little and need you."

But Mrs. X was quite unmoved. She was pretty sure that by now the baby's attention had been diverted to something new by the maid who was with him, and that he had probably forgotten all about her.

It is, of course, very flattering to one's importance to feel that someone is dependent on one's presence. Many mothers encourage their children to be homesick and wretched when they are left alone, not because they love the child with unusual fervor, but because they want to be necessary to it, and keep its love centered on themselves.

They are not expressing love, but a childish need for attention when they thus intensify the child's misery for their own gratification.

Mothers accept, often with relief, the obligation to wean their children from the breast or the bottle, and never face the far more important obligation to wean them emotionally from childish dependence.

It is best for the mother to start early to leave the baby occasionally and accustom it to be happy and contented even in her absence.

Fathers Follow Styles Set By Collegians, Poll Discloses

Modified Version of Tyrol Hat, Popular on Campus Last Year, Adopted by Business Men; Blue Homburg Is Runner-Up.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The collegian, and not his dad, sets the style for discriminating dressers, a poll of Manhattan's style experts for men disclosed today.

One year, the stylists pointed out, the undergraduates went hatless. Nine months later, many of the country's business men went to lunch bareheaded.

Proof that last year's campus hat styles for men are this year's leaders the country over is furnished by the Tyrol, a year ago worn by the few and ogled by the many.

Tyrol Hat Modified

The newest and trimmest Tyrol is admittedly modified, in plain felt, with wide black band on a dark seal brown with a felted edge. It's high in front and low in back, several steps removed from the native gear of Innsbruck. But to America, it's smart.

Running the European importation a close second is the dark blue Homburg, this season a favorite with the young man of Manhattan. The experts warn purchasers not to wear this hat with a blue overcoat, if one would be fussy, for the two blues seldom match. Wear a black hat then; it looks well with any shade of blue.

Fashion Notes.

Fashion notes found on a cuff: "Bowlers" and top hats have regained their rightful winter prominence . . . Hat men insist they'd be in the money if every employed man in America bought one hat a year. Those white and blue-colored string gloves have pushed the pigskin glove off the fashion page . . . Plenty of the reversible raincoats at the Yale-Princeton game, the tan gabardine still tops . . . High style now are two-color striped suits . . . Midnight blue evening clothes still lead here, and they're inexpensive . . . One Madison Avenue shop is selling vicuna camel's hair topcoats for $250 (each), the retailer's idea of the way back to prosperity.

Chiffons and Soft Crepes Will Also Fit Yule Picture

By Frances Mangum,
The Post Fashion Editor.

CLOTHES FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON! That is the theme uppermost in many a shopper's mind. With Christmas only a few week off and New Year's following close, no wonder feminine fancier are inclining wardrobe-ward.

There is no time of the year when clothes should be as expressive as during this season. They must match the spirit of gayety, be symbolic of festivity, and express real joie de vivre.

Fabrics are richer and more glamorous; colors are more varied, and a combination of colors more appealing; the styles themselves seem especially designed to flatter.

Without the shadow of a doubt, some of the most appropriate dresses for this gay time will be those made of metal cloth. There's a world of glitter and glamour about them! For the most part such dresses depend on their styling to put them across. If the lines are good, then the fabric speaks for itself and does not need an abundance of trimming.

Those of you who are choosing your festive frocks now will want to beware of metal cloth dresses bedecked like Christmas trees with costume jewelry. Jewelry trim is good, yes—but only when it is moderately and tastefully done. Take, for instance, the gold lame dress shown on this page. There is a single clip at the neck, and this of dark green emeralds set in dull gold. It needs nothing else. The sleeves in unusual draped style, the slight fullness around the waist, the row of tiny gold lame, covered buttons up the front, the fabric itself—all these are sufficient unto themselves to give this dress elegance galore.

• • • •

Another good bet for this season are the rich brocade dresses. There's a queenly quality about them that will especially become the regal type of beauty. Gowns in such materials must, like the lame, be plain. Their lines and their fabric speak eloquently.

In choosing a brocade dress bear in mind that a heavy velvet bow or sash or a jeweled belt will turn the trick far better than innumerable and frilly furbelows.

Such dresses are available now in colors that will turn the steadiest head. There are black ones highlighted with gold and silver or crimson, deep greens and vivid blues, iridescent under the lights.

If you buy a brocade frock that is a combination of two or more colors, you'll do well to see that any trimming is carried out in one of these shades. Too many colors can on this type of frock, like too many jewels, give it a cheap and over-decorated effect.

• • • •

You have more leeway with flowing chiffons and soft crepes. These popular at any time, will also f well into the holiday picture. Sof drapey dresses have a feminini about them that cannot be gainsaid. They're youthful, gracefu and perennial favorites with deb and dowagers alike.

This season you'll find a lot o them trimmed with clusters of fabric flowers. Others with bows anc ties of soft velvet. Many depen on trim of their own material i gay, contrasting shades.

From observation, it is safe to say that these dresses are for the mos part smarter with such trims tha they are with the metallic chain and bands of glistening stones tha have so overwhelmed us this season

However, do not think that personal jewelry, such as a bracelet, necklace and earrings do otherwise than bring out the charm of the dress and wearer alike.

• • • •

For the Christmas season you cannot choose colors that are too gay or bright. Some argue that i the midst of a festive scene it is the soft-hued dress that will stand out.

But you may notice that unless that dress is absolutely the nth degree of chic, and unless it is worn with lots of verve and flare, it runs the risk of being eclipsed by more striking and gala gowns.

Price Tags Hint At Better Times

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—For th first time in years, women are buying cloth coats priced at $1,500.

To pay $1,500 for a fur wrap isn't unusual? But the garment trade pricked up its ears when the Fashion Originators' Guild announced the sale of five cloth coats at that price over the country.

In the garment district it was interpreted as meaning that men again can afford to dress their wives well, and that the price tag is no longer the paramount question.

Maurice Rentner, who was designing metallic frocks on severe tailored lines last season, now is showing ultra-feminine bar dresses of metal cloth. Topped by a fur scarf and a little veiled dinner hat, they look more sophisticated than long skirts.

Afternoon clothes are dressie than they have been for severa seasons, and the colors are richer.

Much Latitude in Etiquette of Offering Gifts Occasioned by Complexity of Life in Capital

Presents May Be Sent to Other Than Intimates With Propriety.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE PRESENTATION of gifts and the receiving of gifts at Christmas time and on other occasions in Washington must conform to the rules of good manners and methods of procedure peculiar to the complex life of a world capital.

There is much latitude in Washington for the sending of gifts to people who are not intimate friends. The habit of making gifts to the members of the White House family and other official families is not confined merely to the Christmas season, but the mails in the official social centers do increase around the Yuletide.

It is not necessary, but has been accepted as a custom within the limits of good form, to send cards or flowers or even small remembrances at Christmas time, wedding and debut parties to officials or their families, even though the acquaintanceship is not of a very intimate character.

Of course the gifts are never expensive. It is much better taste to express admiration with flowers. Expensive gifts are never sent to people who are not members of the family or very close family friends. One of the chief embarrassments of some officials are the expensive gifts from people they do not know or with whom they have a mere acquaintance.

Acknowledgment Required.

No well-bred person ever lets any gift go unacknowledged. A gracious reply must be made promptly for a gift of flowers or a small gift as well as for expensive ones.

It is this time of year that the bachelor has his own gift problems. An engaged man may send his fiance a handsome gift, but it should never be clothing, accessories or jewelry. Some women, however, do accept jewelry from young men to whom they are engaged at Christmas or for a birthday present. The rules in this regard are not as strictly kept as they once were, to the regret of the more conservative members of Washington's social circles.

A woman, even if she is engaged, does not give a man expensive gifts if she wishes to conform to the accepted rules of good taste. Flowers, candy, fruit, books, new music, or kindred articles are considered the best form for gifts from a young man to a young lady. It is not considered the best form for a woman to send a man, handkerchiefs, neckties, slippers or any other articles of clothing. She may, however, send pencils or pens, note books, books and such articles of an impersonal character. She must never send flowers, fruit or candy.

Questions.

Query—What does a young man wear to a debutante party and to dinner afterward. I have been asked to a tea dance from five to seven and to dinner at eight. It is a small informal dinner and the party is going to the theater afterward.

Answer—You can wear what you would wear to any formal afternoon party. Many men follow the example of some of our leading statesman and wear their business clothes to afternoon functions. To be strictly in keeping with good form, however, you should wear more formal garb. You should go home and change into a dinner coat for the dinner.

Query—Is there any polite way to tell a guest who has remained in your house two months after being invited for only two weeks that you would like her to go home. She keeps saying she is leaving the next weekend but never does when the weekend arrives.

Answer—The next time she announces she is leaving take her departure for granted. As the time approaches you might express a polite regret at her decision to go but say you know that she is anxious to get home and that you hope she will come to visit you again.

Query—Will it be necessary to provide gifts for all the members of a Christmas house party of which I am to be a member? I have gifts for my host and hostess and their children. I know some of the guests but not all of them. The house party is to be at a country estate and I will have to provide the gifts I wish to give before I leave Washington as there are no shops near.

Answer—It is not necessary to give gifts to fellow guests at a house party unless they are friends to whom you would make gifts anyway. You should provide a small gift for each member of the family and give Christmas tips to the domestics. If you wish you can present each guest with a Christmas card.

Query—My employer has been very kind to me and I wish to make some acknowledgement at Christmas. I would like to buy him a little gift. I know his wife also. My mother suggests that I send flowers to my employer's house with my card. But a woman may not send flowers to a man unless he is ill and an intimate friend, I have been told.

Answer—You can quite properly send flowers to the home of your employer with a Christmas card for his wife and a Christmas card for him. Such a joint gift would be in good taste. If you want to make a direct gift to your employer you could send him a book and his wife, flowers or a card. Be sure to send the book for your employer to his house at the same time you send the flowers or card for his wife.

Metallic Bar Dresses Striking Under Furs

The metallic bar dresses are stunning under fur coats and lend themselves admirably to accessories. In fact, one stylist says you can practically change the whole effect of your costume by wearing different colored hats and shoes and complementary bags and gloves. Bright colors may always be counted upon to be striking with these frocks.

Hollywood Still Looks to Paris For Smartness

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., Nov. 30.—As a world style center, Hollywood agrees that Paris is still "the top." But Hollywood, having announced itself as a contender for the title, modestly asserts that the film city fashions are also "coming right along."

Orry-Kelly, Warner Brothers stylist, who gowns such stars as Marion Davies, Kay Francis, Dolores Del Rio and Ruby Keeler, believes that while Hollywood is definitely a great influence upon world fashions, it will never be the true center until a conscious attempt is made to make it so.

"American manufacturers still take French styles and modify them, make them more practical," he says. "Of course, that doesn't do Paris any good—which may be one of the reasons leading to the Patou-Poiret downfall. American women are the smartest in the world, and since they are more natural persons, they require different types of clothes from the French women.

"Don't think for a moment, though, that Paris is out of the running. Still, I do believe that it is losing its grip, and it will take time to determine what is going to happen.

"A few years ago, Paris laughed at motion picture styles, and today they have become Paris' greatest rival.

"However, Hollywood will never become the greatest style center until a conscious attempt is made to do it. What style supremacy we now have 'just happened.' But if we concentrate—spend some money—realize what a source of revenue such a development would be—then I am sure Hollywood can become 'the top'."

Hats That Go With Winter Furs Reported Much in Demand Now

By Pattie Ellicott.

MANY GAY CHRISTMAS SHOPPERS are looking for clothes to wear to Southern resorts as well as for gifts for Christmas. Since the spring chapeaux usually blossoms in Washington at the same time as the mistletoe and holly is being hung for Christmas those that will look well with winter furs are very much in demand.

Most of the spring hats have a "flyaway" look and are fashioned of felt of pastel tones and of silk. Many of them flaunt bright roses or spring flowers.

While some of us have just hung away our last spring and summer flowered dresses for the winter some of the smartest dressed Washington women are wearing new early spring printed dresses at the luncheon and teas of the hour.

One debutante danced at a tea dance in an early spring dress of black silk with a large conventional design of white flowers with green leaves all over it. She wore a most saucy hat of green silk to match the high green silk collar of her dress.

Mrs. John Boettiger, daughter of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, appeared at one of the teas of last week in a dress of dark blue wool with a pin strip of silver. There was a high military collar and bandings of blue wool. With this Mrs. Boettiger wore a blue beret with a bright feather at the side.

Mrs. Samuel A. Swiggett looked very smart at one of the recent meetings of a women's club in a dress of brown wool with which she wore a Paisley cape cut on modish lines. She wore a small brown hat with a grosgrained band.

Mrs. Frances W. Wheeler, who was at the same meeting had on a dress of black crepe de chene with a surplice blouse with white collar and cuffs. She wore a black fur coat with a black lynx collar and a black hat with a soft crown and medium brim.

Mrs. McCook Knox is wearing a street costume of dark tweed with a small golden strip in it. This is made in swagger coat effect and with it Mrs. Knox wears a fur scarf and a small hat of brown felt.

Mrs. Jouette Shouse wore for one of the luncheons recently a dress of golden brown velvet with a darker brown stripe in it. With this she wore a brown fur coat and a brown hat.

Biltwell Puts Seabrook, Md. Home on View

Air-Conditioned Dwelling Is of Steel Wall Construction.

A home featuring important innovations in construction will be opened today for public inspection at Seabrook, Md., opposite the Pennsylvania Railroad station on the Lanham-Severn concrete highway. This display house, which will be open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., until further notice, features the development of the Biltwell Homes Corporation for which Donegan & Co. are exclusive agents. The home is sponsored by The Washington Post.

The home is of steel wall construction, air conditioned by Superfex, perfectly insulated, weather sealed and represents extra strength and low-cost upkeep. It is of the attractive Cape Cod colonial design. Located on a 50 by 330 foot lot it is only 20 minutes from downtown Washington and may be seen by taking the following route: Out Blandenburg road to the Memorial Cross; then out Defense highway 5 miles to Lanham and take the left fork a mile to the house.

Rooms Are Spacious.

The display residence is of model type from floor to roof. It has unusually large rooms. Its kitchen is well equipped and its modern bath has Briggs Beautyware fixtures. It is equipped with an automatic oil burner and has plenty of closet space. It is furnished by Hutchison, Inc.

The Biltwell Homes Corporation permits prospective buyers to build on their own lots or those of the corporation. For those who require homes of different sizes, designs and specifications, there is a wide variety of plans to choose from and the corporation will build according to the plans. For those who require less elaborate residences, the corporation offers structures with living room, two bedrooms, kitchen, bath and basement at less cost.

"The house of the future is a fabricated steel construction home at low cost," says James Donegan, president of Biltwell Corporation. The expensive building methods, of putting a house together brick by brick, or one piece of lumber at a time, or one nail at a time are rapidly becoming obsolete.

"Thousands of years ago when man first started to build houses, he built them brick by brick, or tree by tree. With the advent of machinery he cut the trees up into pieces of lumber. Since then few appreciable strides have been made in the production of houses.

"In almost every other field the principles of mass production have been applied. Costs have been brought down and things that were once luxuries to the average working man are now necessities. A few years ago only a wealthy man could own an automobile.

Ford Sets an Example.

"The manufacturers said 'Let's get the highest prices possible.' That, of course, meant that only a few people could buy. At that time, 1903, 11,000 cars was a whole year's production. Then along came Henry Ford with his ideas of mass production, who said, 'Let's bring the

Colonial Park Revives Charm Of Early Days

Post Model Home Attracts Attention to Beauties of Development.

Colonial Park, Va., is filled with visitors now attracted by The Washington Post model home, directing attention to this stately development. The model home is offered by R. L. Kane, Inc., realtors, builders and exclusive agents and completely furnished by Hilda Miller.

A distinguished colonial home of authentic Jeffersonian adaptation, this dwelling represents architecturally the true colonial motif in a most faithful manner. Structurally, it is a masterpiece that sets new standards of excellence in homes built to sell at moderate prices, being offered at $14,500.

Spaciousness, an air of hospitality and beauty of finish are keynotes to the charm and appeal of this home. It will be open today and daily until 9 p. m. and may be seen by the following route: Drive out the Upper Ridge Alexandria road; turn right on Russell road at the Y, continue on to Colonial Park entrance on right and follow The Washington Post signs to the property.

Brick Construction.

Across the Threshold

By Margaret Tyler.

Hello, everybody! I've been having such a grand time shopping for houses this week. I wish you could have been everywhere I have been and hope you can find time to go soon. These wintry, blowy days make me appreciate the warmth and coziness of these lovely homes, and when I'm once inside and over the threshold I like the houses so much I want to stay. I understand why so many, many people are house hunting nowadays and why so many are buying homes. They certainly are comfy and homey. The houses in Washington's new real estate developments are more charming than I have seen elsewhere, for entire groups are being worked out with the same architectural motif, yet each home is a gem of individuality and distinction.

Greenwich Forest is a perfect example. Here are beautiful homes in a wooded section. A winding road leads into this area, where oak trees, tall and straight, lend an indescribable air of seclusion and exclusiveness. The newest house, a Dutch colonial, at 7117 Hampden lane, is open today for inspection. It is the most beautiful spot in all Greenwich Forest, I believe, for it is on an elevation overlooking the fountain in the little park, and the lot has a 172-foot frontage. The home is surrounded by towering shade trees and smaller blossoming trees, including both tulip and dogwood. The design of the house itself is intriguing. A winding brick walk leads to the entrance. A reception room with coat closet opens into the center hall. To the left is the spacious living room, with its colonial fireplace and its door opening to an arched portico. There is a large dining room and a study with a door leading outside. The "all-electric" kitchen is perfection itself. It is equipped with electric range, electric refrigerator and a ventilating fan which keeps the kitchen air clean and fresh.

Winding stairs lead to the second floor, with its three bedrooms and two baths. The master bedroom is very large, with a private bath and three closets, one of which is an immense, well-insulated cedar closet. The main bath has a linen closet and a neo-angle tub, divided from the lavatory by a vivid curtain hung from a chromium plated telescope rod. The attic, finished, heated and insulated and having a bath and closet, may be used for many purposes. In the basement is a recreation room finished in black, silver and Chinese red. In another section of the basement is the laundry room and the General Electric automatic heating plant.

So many things about this house are convenient and make living very pleasant. The woodwork is finished with an enamel that is resistant to stains; the wallpaper is washable and the entire house is easily kept clean. An automatic heating plant makes heating cleaner and the electric stove is a great convenience. Every closet in the house is electrically lighted and the house embodies every convenience and modern improvement. All in all, this Greenwich Forest home is about perfect.

Another beautiful home which I have visited is the Bradley, Beall & Howard exhibit home at 3001 Legation street. This house adjoins Rock Creek Park and is in an excellent, close-in location. On entering, I was happily surprised to see maple parquet floors with in-

2 Distinctive Homes Opened In Glenbrook

'Thriftee-Step' Houses in Newbold Development Impress Visitors.

Glenbrook Village, owned and developed by the Newbold Development Co., just off Old Georgetown road in Bethesda, Md., has adopted as its slogan, "A Suburb Worthy of the Nation's Capital." Its constant effort to keep apace with Washington's remarkable growth; to interpret the exacting demands of the most discriminating home seekers in America with outstanding dwellings is an accomplishment not easily achieved. Yet in a comparatively short period, the Newbold Development Co. has made remarkable strides.

Nearly a score of "Thriftee-Step" homes, consistent with Newbold fine construction and moderate price, have been erected and sold in Glenbrook Village. Now, Newbold has opened two new homes of this distinctive type, that embody practical individuality with very sensible plan of arrangement. So much so that every one who has

Colorful Career of T. R. Is Depicted in Murals

In the new New York State Memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, massive murals depict a colorful biography of "T. R.'s" vivid pageant of life. William Andrew Mackey, the noted painter of murals, has executed the brilliant panels that tell so graphically of Roosevelt's experiences. The memorial, located on West End avenue in New York City, will be opened to the public in the near future.

Guilford Firm Plans to Build 100 Dwellings

Residences in Restricted Community to Cost Less Than $5,000.

A hundred homes selling for less than $5,000 each are planned for Guilford, Va., by the Guilford Land Co.

Each home will be on a site not less than 100 feet by 200 feet and the community will be rigidly restricted as to the type of family the builder will allow to buy. Great care in selecting substantial families is necessary to protect the values in the community, the developer feels.

A dozen houses are now ready for inspection and several have already been sold. Announcing that Guilford has been developed to fill the need of families who want fine homes at small cost, representatives of the company state: "It is seldom that a new idea in home development has had the remarkable and almost instant response that has greeted the Guilford plan.

"Those responsible for this new development have based their plan upon these fundamental principles:

"First, deep in the heart of every person is the desire to have his home just a little different from any other home, either in the matter of construction or in its natural surroundings.

"Second, it is the ambition of every person that ultimately he will own a home with grounds large enough so that he may have a flower or vegetable garden, fruit trees, rock gardens, etc.

"Third, the present demand is for a home so priced that the buyer may be sure that he will be able to pay for it at no additional expense other than the rent he is now paying.

"Fourth, since the advent of the automobile, persons are wliling to spend an extra five minutes in driving if they can obtain these privileges."

Spray Gun Painting Is Pursued as Hobby

As a hobby, Fred Lawrence, automobile painter in Oklahoma City, has painted more than 100 landscape and patraits with a spray gun. Different effects are obtained by the trigger action, the distance of the nozzle from the picture, and the consistency of the lacquer. Says Mr. Lawrence: "The flexibility of the spray gun, combined with the lasting qualities and color range of medium lacquer, convince me that spray pictures will have a definite place in art in the near future."

Enamel Medicine Chest.

It is easy for the medicine chest to become soiled and spotted and it is important to keep it in perfect sanitary condition. Enamel will renew it and make it a colorful asset to the bathroom's scheme of decoration.

is a two-car built-in garage with connecting covered patio. Other features of the home include concealed radiation, copper water pipes, colonial lighting fixtures, screening and weatherstripping. The house is insulated. It is located on a large landscaped lot, 100 by 150 feet.

This residence is situated among some of the most handsome colonial homes in nearby Virginia and is one of the most interesting homes of its type ever shown. It is a value that will not remain long unsold. Colonial Park is located on a high elevation close to Washington and overlooking the Potomac.

Setting in Harmony.

Colonial Park consists of magnificent homes of authentic colonial adaptation. It is a delightful area of wooded countryside, providing a setting in harmony with the architectural motif of the homes. The builders, specialists in colonial adaptation, have achieved the height of architectural charm and structural excellence in its homes.

The subdivision consists of the remaining portion of the Lloyd estate, the old mansion of which has been a landmark in nearby Virginia for 150 years.

It was opened about three years ago and the building sites face on Mansion drive, a newly built macadam street 50 feet wide, having concrete curbs, gutters and sidewalks and running from Russell road on the east to Virginia avenue in Jefferson Park on the wect. It is described as the highest lying development between the Washington Monument and the George Washington Memorial in Alexandria.

It is to be found in a grove of the oldest and stateliest oak trees anywhere in this section. The owner, in subdividing, laid off large building sites of sufficient size to permit the construction of handsome homes and to produce in true scale, the early Virginia homestead. The average lot in the park contains more than one-third of an acre.

All improvements have been installed, including a sewer, which is a part of the Alexandria sewerage system; gas, electricity and city water.

The attractions of Colonial Park are many. It is within 4½ miles of downtown Washington, with a choice of several good highways to the city. The subdivision itself lies on both sides of a meandering drive, having a wide roadway which has been improved with macadam. While near all of the main highways, it is just off the main line of travel, thereby insuring quietness and freedom from disadvantages of heavy traffic.

The building restrictions are such as to insure an exclusive, select class of residents. It is proposed that no dwelling be erected in Colonial Park that does not bear some true relation to early colonial architecture.

2 More Glenbrook Homes Are Opened

visited these homes has left with an indelible impression that here is among the finest in small house construction, but constructed with an undeviating regard for quality, convenience and beauty.

A visit to these homes today is suggested. One of them has been completely furnished. They may be reached by driving out Wisconsin avenue, or over the East-West highway to the Bank of Bethesda and proceeding right down Old Georgetown road one-half mile to Glenbrook Village.

Both homes have been inspected and approved during construction by the Architectural Section of the Federal Housing Administration, and are eligible for loans under the Federal Housing Administration plan.

It's Important to Know Water Valve Location

It is important that every member of a household should know where the main shut-off valve for the water supply system is located. It is also advisable for the members of a family to be familiar with the location of the valves controlling branch lines and individual fixtures.

Wall Brackets Cheap.

Many times when a convenience outlet is inserted in a room a wall bracket can be put above it at slight extra cost while the opening is made.

Tip for Mixing Colors.

When colors are mixed to obtain a particular shade, be sure not to underestimate the quantity required as it is extremely difficult to get an exact match of color.

Yule Holidays Spur the Sales Of Gas Ranges

Housewives Are Warned Campaign Offer to Expire Soon.

With the announcement that the co-operative gas range campaign will end soon, hundreds of Washington housewives have been spurred to take advantage of the opportunity to make a selection from among the latest models in all desirable color schemes and sizes, with an allowance up to $20 for an old stove, regardless of its age or condition—depending only on the value of the new range selected.

With the Christmas holidays approaching shoppers in increasing numbers are visiting the attractive displays at the leading department and household appliance stores and giving favorable consideration to the purchase of a gas range as an ideal family Christmas gift — one that will mean much throughout the year for every member of the family, in better and more varied menus and relief from worry with the saving of time and labor for mother.

Although the campaign is drawing to a close, each of the stores mentioned above is maintaining a complete stock so that buyers will not be disappointed, and the home service department of the Washington Gas Light Co. is continuing its visits to each purchaser of a modern gas range during this campaign, to explain its operation and answer all questions regarding recipes, marketing and food preparation.

While it is early to judge the results of this co-operative movement, reports from the stores show that sales quotas have been greatly exceeded and the success of the campaign is assured. But, aside from these results, the educational aspect of such a concerted movement is equally important and H. M. Brundage, jr., general sales manager of the Washington Gas Light Co., in commenting upon this phase of activity stated: "It is indeed gratifying to note the response of Washington women to one of the main objectives in this campaign—that of acquainting them with the most modern equipment for the better preparation of food. Their interest and questions at the demonstrations show their desire for that which is new, embodying the latest developments of scientific research in this important field."

Housewives are realizing that outmoded equipment is a handicap in entertaining during the winter season, and with foresight for anticipated gatherings, are buying now to relieve themselves of unnecessary work and worry in the kitchen and to assure the success of their parties in the coming season. They know that the purchase of a modern range now will mean a saving.

Sales Record Of Oldsmobile Cars Expected

Zone Manager Confident of Business Far Above That of Last Year.

Prior to the announcement of the 1936 model automobiles in October and November this year, it was generally agreed that balanced engineering would be the predominant note of all cars.

In the language of the automotive fraternity, the term balanced engineering is understood to be a proper proportioning of all the desirable features in a motorcar. These features as understood by the public are those which contribute to safety, economy, comfort and performance without the emphasis of one feature at the expense of another.

W. T. Agee, zone manager for the Olds Motor Works in the Washington territory, took occasion the other day to point out that at a meeting held in Washington last September he stressed the fact that in the 1935 model Oldsmobile the public had justified the factory's belief in a car that was designed with these engineering features in mind and registered their approval by buying in such numbers that Oldsmobile had enjoyed one of the biggest years in the 38 years of its history.

With the advent of the 1936 Oldsmobile, Mr. Agee is more confident than ever that this year will far surpass last year in setting a new all-time record of sales for his company. He goes on to explain that Oldsmobile has ample speed and power, but not to the detriment of dependability and long life; acceleration, but not at the expense of long life; streamlining representing the latest advance in automobile design, but so handled that it does not impair visibility.

To him, individual front wheel suspension is one of the outstanding developments of automobile engineering of the last few years, because, as he says, it gives additional riding comfort to passengers both front and rear.

Company Head Puts His Faith In Newspapers

Plumbing Concern Official Recites Advertising Value to Firm.

The newspaper as an advertising medium was praised in a letter of C. B. Nash, vice president, Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co.

Mr. Nash said that during the last two years the major portion of the company's advertising appropriation has been spent in newspapers, the purpose being to stimulate the sale of "Standard" plumbing fixtures through local licensed master plumbers.

"To accomplish this purpose," Nash wrote, "we turned to the newspapers. Through newspaper advertising we could work speedily, reaching the various sections of the country at exactly the time most appropriate. We could also pick exactly the territories we wanted to cover, create local interest on the part of the licensed master plumbers, give the exact address of our distributors where 'Standard' plumbing fixtures were on display, and, of course, take advantage of the local confidence enjoyed by advertisers in local newspapers.

"Our newspaper advertising has been an important factor in the great progress 'Standard' has made during the last year. Our plants at Baltimore and Pittsburgh, which have been closed for three years, have been reopened. Our plants in Trenton, N. J.; Louisville, Ky.; Tiffin, Ohio; Kokomo, Ind., and Richmond, Calif., have taken on an increased number of employes."

Saw Rotted Parts Of Porch Bases

Circulation of Air Prevents Water From Collecting.

If the bases of your wooden porch columns have rotted, they should be taken down and the rotten portion sawed off and replaced.

If they are solid posts, when you put them back use bases that are like inverted pans with legs at the corners. This allows the air to circulate under them and prevents the water from collecting.

If they are hollow columns, after repairing them bore holes at the base and top to allow air to circulate through them.

Porous Materials Allow Deep Paint Penetration

Well-aged brick, stucco and concrete require no different paint form other exterior work. If these surfaces are not well-aged, however, they should be given special primers which usually contain tung oil varnishes. Any high quality house paint may then be used for the finishing coats. Or, if preferred, special stucco or brick coatings may be used. Ordinary brick, concrete and stucco are unusually porous. This porosity is an advantage from a painter's point of view because it allows the paint to penetrate deeply and thus secure a firm anchorage.

According to etymologists, real estate originally meant royal grant. It is so connected with land in the public mind that realtor is easily understood, even at first hearing. "or" is a suffix meaning a doer, one who performs an act, as grantor, executor, etc. Thus realtor—a doer in real estate. The efficiency of the name rests in its absolute ownership by the National Association of Real Estate Boards with power to confer it upon its members.

The books are to be published in two volumes and will include data which has not heretofore been available in one publication such as the several fee schedules affecting construction, recording, etc. In addition, he intends including a directory of District of Columbia officials and departmental heads. The new books are to be sold at $70 a set and orders may be placed with Mr. Lusk, 1508 H street northwest.

William M. Throckmorton spent a few days hunting in North Carolina last week.

Weaver Bros, Inc., is utilizing more office space on the second floor of the Washington Building.

H. Clifford Bangs was a speaker at the convention of the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association at Harrisburg, Pa., last week.

E. B. Toombs, of Harry B. Pitts Co., on a recent hunting trip in Virginia, brought back, among other game, a 13-pound wild turkey.

A. C. Houghton has been named a committeeman to represent the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers at the meeting of the International Federation of Surveyors at Belgrade, Serbia, next year.

Suggestions Are Made On Care of Furnace

Every spring when the furnace is allowed to start its summer vacation the metal smoke pipe that connects it to the chimney should be taken down and cleaned and put some place where it will not rust.

Before the fire is started in the fall this pipe, of course, must be set up again, but before it is put in place should be carefully examined to see that there are no holes or cracks in it.

If it was not taken down in the spring, it should certainly be taken down in the fall before the fire is started and cleaned and examined before being replaced. Look on the under side for weak spots—that is where it will give way first.

Dark Hall May Become Part of Living Room

A narrow dark hall may become a bright extension to your living room if you have a part of the partition between the two ripped out and left wide open with four glass shelves running across the opening. Beguiling bric-a-brac on the glass shelves and light-tinted paint on the walls and ceiling of the hallway complete the picture.

Air-Condition Pays for Costs Of Installation

Increased Heating Bill, Damage to Furniture Prevented by Equipment.

By C. M. Wilcox.

Who pays for air conditioning in the home? Those who really pay for air conditioning in the home are those who don't have it. They pay for it every year in increased heating costs; damage to furniture, woodwork and other material possessions kept where the air is not conditioned. And sometimes, they pay for it in doctor's bills and often in loss of earning.

Few realize that it is not enough that the furnace room be equipped to give only heat. Our fathers are not to be held accountable for that which they did not know, but today when science has plainly demonstrated that unconditioned air is the greatest enemy in the average home, the situation is different.

Our modern life is changing daily according to the decisions reached in the court of science. Many people in the Washington area are air conditioning their homes by the score. They are the ones who are not paying for air conditioning.

He who would protect his home and the health of his family must be on constant guard. Science warns him of the battle he must face. He is wise who accredits to our modern day a greater knowledge than those of yesterday.

The Wilcox Air Conditioning Corporation, local distributors for Superfex air conditioning, manufactured by Perfection Stove Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, have established a remarkable record in the short space of seven months. They have tied for sales honors with the country's leading distributors of Superfex, and have air conditioned many new homes in the Washington area.

Mortar Cracks In Brick Homes Affect Health

Elimination Held Necessary to Obtain Benefits of New Building Methods.

Modern brick residences cannot obtain the full benefits of improved insulation, air conditioning and new construction methods unless the cracks occurring between mortar and bricks are eliminated, according to R. A. Rawson, division sales director of the Master Builders Co. of Cleveland.

"The more healthful living conditions and greater economy in heating and maintenance, which are expected in the modern home, cannot be fully realized until the factors which cause mortar cracks and admit moisture are overcome," Rawson said.

"Mortar shrinkage, the recognized cause of these failures, has been effectively overcome in many large modern buildings erected within the last few years. Among them are new barracks, a military hospital and other buildings at West Point, the Hershey Industrial School and other structures at Hershey, Pa., manufacturing building for E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. and other industrial, commercial and institutional buildings whose aggregate value probably exceeds $50,000,000.

"Application of the same corrective measures to brick mortar in residential construction is necessary to insure water-tightness and to protect insulating materials commonly used in the brick home of today."

How to Paint Floor.

When painting a floor, be sure to start at the side farthest from the door so as to avoid the embarrassing situation of "painting yourself in."

Worn Extension Cords Should Be Replaced

Worn extension cords on lamps or other electrical fixtures should be replaced promptly. The cost is small compared with a burned down house or a severe shock. When the wires begin to bend too easily where they enter the connections, or when the outside silk covering wears out, it is time to buy new ones.

Switch Should Control Every Ceiling Outlet

There should be a switch for lighting control accessible to every doorway in the house. Every ceiling outlet should be switch controlled. When inserting an extra convenience outlet, it is a good idea to have switches put in that will prevent the necessity of reaching to overhead lights.

New American Home Sponsor Plans 4 More

Design Will Be Similar to That of Dwelling in Rollingwood.

The enthusiasm and sustained interest shown by the hundreds of daily visitors to the "New American" home in Rollingwood indicate it as an outstanding presentation. The builders, Waverly Taylor, Inc., are preparing to place on exhibit four other houses, similar in architectural design out of varying sizes and on lots up to half an acre in size. Meantime, the home sponsored by the General Electric Co., and furnished by Woodward & Lothrop, is being kept open.

The location is not only beautiful but possesses many practical advantages. With winding streets, wooded lots and an unobstructed view across the broad valley of Rock Creek Park, no more beautiful site can be found near Washington. Added to this is the direct approach from the city in less than 20 minutes from the White House by way of Sixteenth street and through Rock Creek Park on Sherrill drive and Beach drive. The nearby golf courses, children's playground, saddle clubs and parks provide the best of recreational facilities for the entire family.

Norman Motif Is Used.

The architecture of these homes is described by the architects, Waverly Taylor and J. F. Hogan, as being a modern adaptation of Norman, a style which conforms to the wooded setting and rolling terrain of Rollingwood. The exterior walls are brick, painted white in some houses and light tints of cream and yellow in others. There are interesting overhanging gables with half-timbering of hand-adzed cypress, stained in dark shades with panels of stucco and of brick, laid in random pattern and left unpainted. Roofs are generally of heavy, random slate, though dark mottled red shingle tile have been used on the General Electric house. The doors, sash and blinds have been painted in complementary colors.

The entrance walks, of variegated flagstone, lead to interesting doorways. As one enters the General Electric home, he comes first to the center hall, with step-down living room on the right and dining room on the left. Directly ahead is the stairway with ornamental white iron rail. A large coat closet with pull out garment hanger is at the right of the stairs.

The living room extends across the eastern end of the house, with windows on three sides and door opening to the loving porch, screened with bronze wire. All the windows are double casements of Thorn steel sash, extra heavy and operated by bronze geared adjusters, each window being fitted with a natural colored Venetian blind and full length bronze screen with metal frame. The fireplace with its specially designed mantel, is in the center of the long wall.

Concealed Ducts Radiate Heat.

There are no radiators, the heat being supplied by a modern General Electric air conditioning plant through concealed ducts and inconspicious grilles to each room. After circulation across the room, the air is drawn out by exhaust ducts. All the air so circulated is first filtered to remove dust and pollen, it is then warmed by passing over steam coils and finally it is humidified by a series of water pans, the percentage of humidity being automatically controlled.

The benefits resulting from this system are numerous. It has been found that the number and seriousness of colds and other respiratory diseases are reduced by conditioned air; victims of hay fever and asthma are greatly benefited and occupants are comfortable at lower temperatures than are necessary in dry air. Cleaner air naturally reduces housework and humidification eliminates the drying out and shrinkage of woodwork and furniture.

Opening from the rear corner of the living room is a door to the first floor study, paneled in knotty pine. Beyond this is the kitchen, completely equipped with General Electric monitor top refrigerator, electric range, dishwasher and kitchen waste unit. The cabinets are all of metal and the working tops of heavy linoleum. There is an outside service door next to the garage entrance, both being protected by a copper deck entry roof.

On the second floor there are three bedrooms and two beautifully appointed baths. There are numerous closets, all lined with cedar and fitted with shoe racks and extra shelves. There is a disappearing stairway to the attic.

The basement has been utilized to the fullest extent. There is a very large lounge, paneled in knotty pine and having a fireplace with wide colonial mantel. Next to it is the heater room, with all the air conditioning apparatus. There is a maid's room and bath, large laundry and storage closet. The two-car garage is on the first floor level and forms a wing extension on the west side of the house.

This home will be open daily from 9:30 a. m. to 9:30 p. m. To reach the property, drive out Sixteenth street northwest to Sherrill drive (opposite Walter Reed Hospital), turning left to Beach drive and then right, following Beach drive for two miles to the "New American Home" sign at Leland street, or drive out Connecticut avenue to East Woodbine street, turn right to Brookeville road, left one block to Leland street and right about one-half mile to "New American" home sign.

W. F. Roberts Co.

Another of the "New American" homes built by Waverly Taylor, Inc., in Rollingwood. This home, similar to the one sponsored by the General Electric Co. and furnished by Woodward & Lothrop, is equipped with G. E. air conditioning. To reach it, drive out Sixteenth street to Sherrill drive (opposite Walter Reed Hospital), thence to Beach drive and turn right two miles to sign at Leland street, or drive out Connecticut avenue to East Woodbine street, turn right to Brookeville road, left one block to Leland street and right on Leland one-half mile to "New American Home" sign.

'One-Man Clinics' Reported Success

Milwaukee Shows Marked Gain in Business.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Marked stimulus to business done by private financial institutions here under the Federal Housing Administration's "Single-Mortgage System" has developed out of the inauguration of "one-man clinics" in several local banks and building and loan associations.

The plan was advertised in local newspapers and on stipulated days a representative of the Federal Housing Administration was on hand to give interviews to persons interested in refinancing existing mortgages or in new building. Results were satisfactory, as is shown in an extract from a letter to the associate director from L. E. Stanton, secretary of the Badger Savings Building & Loan Association, of Milwaukee:

"As your records will indicate, we actually did secure a lot of new business, and two weeks later we still are having people come into the office as the direct result of such publicity. We are so pleased with results that we have managed to obtain an additional $200,000 to take care of the loans, and indications are that we are going to be pretty busy all winter."

Buy Good Enamel Cleaners

Choose drain and closet bowl cleaners carefully. The cheaper cleaners are likely to damage the enamel finish. Your plumber will be glad to recommend a cleaner which can be used with safety.

Building - Loan Report Shows October Peak

9,994 Families Borrowed $20,137,000 to Finance or Repair Homes.

At least 9,994 families financed their homes or repairs on their property through savings, building and loan associations to a total amount of $20,137,000 during the 1935 peak month of lending, October. This report was made public recently by the United States Building and Loan League, which says that these figures represent the lending activities of one-eighth of all the associations in existence, having one-sixth of the total resources of all savings and loan institutions. Using the sample as a base, the loans for the Nation as a whole are probably 60,000 totalling around $108,000,000 in the one month.

Morton Bodfish, executive vice president of the league, emphasized that one-fourth of the home loans reported by the 1,339 associations were for construction of homes, and another 10 per cent of the disbursements were for modernization and repairs so that at least one-third of the credit being extended by these community lending institutions today is helping make jobs.

Compared with two years ago, this breakdown of the lending is especially indicative of a healthier condition. At that time scarcely 8 or 9 per cent of current lending activity was for new construction and home modernization combined.

The loans were reported by associations having total assets of $1,090,061,341 and were grouped in five different classifications according to purpose of the advance. While refinancing continues as the leading purpose among the five segregated, new construction and home purchase loans are steadily increasing in importance. Repair and modernization commitments accounted for one-fifth of the number of October borrowers from the associations. Financing for other purposes, such as the pledging of a debt-free home in order to raise money, accounted for the remainder of the loans. The aggregate of all reports in each class of loan gives the following analysis of community lending business by these savings institutions today:

No. of loans.	Purpose.	Volume.	Per cent of total.
1,644	New const. loans..	$4,822,883	23.5
2,046	Repair. mod. loans.	1,938,073	9.1
2,746	Loans for refinanc.	6,885,360	34.1
1,894	For home purchase.	4,599,870	22.8
1,664	For other purposes.	1,990,939	9.8

"The average size of the various types of loan reported is significant because it shows where the small and middle income group of citizens are getting perhaps the largest part of their home financing," said Mr. Bodfish. "The average construction loan reported was about $2,925; for the repair and modernization loans it was $936; for refinancing of loans formerly held by other institutions, $2,562, and for the miscellaneous other purposes, the average loan was $1,197. Assuming that the construction loans were for the average of 60 to 65 per cent of the total value of the property, the typical building and loan association mortgage is providing for the building of $4,000 to $5,000 houses. They seem likewise to be financing the transfer of properties of this size and cost as a rule."

Shades Are Suggested For Painting Chimney

If the brick chimney of your house is discolored, or if you'd like it to be a different shade, have the painters give it three coats of exterior house paint while they're redecorating the outside of your house. White chimneys on gray houses, buff ones on green, and similar combinations are more distinctive than the usual deep-red variety.

Cellar Framework Should Be Checked

Open Spaces Between Studs Increase Fire Hazard.

Go down in the cellar and examine the framework on top of the masonry walls. Are there open spaces right up between the wooden studs that form the outside frame of the house.

If so, fill in these spaces up to the first-floor line either with brick or concrete or even with wood. Open spaces between the studs act as flues and should a fire start in the cellar it would be sucked up through these flues and the entire house would be in flames in no time. Take no chances of this happening. These open spaces also make it more difficult to heat the house, as the walls are constantly being cooled by the air circulating between the studs.

Storm Sash, Doors Reduce Heat Loss

A large portion of our heat losses is through windows and doors. One way to cut down these losses is to put up storm sash and storm doors. They create confined air spaces, which serve as insulation and cut down the transmission of heat through the glass areas.

Properly installed and properly cared for, storm sash and storm doors will pay for themselves in fuel savings in a very short time.

Capital Offices 96.9% Rented, Bangs Reports

Washingtonian Speaks at Meeting of Pennsylvania Realty Association.

Business improvement in Washington, occasioned by the influx of new residents as well as betterment of conditions generally, has been reflected in an increased demand for commercial properties here, H. Clifford Bangs, realtor, told members of the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association at its annual meeting in Harrisburg, Pa., Thursday.

Because of this, he said, Washington occupies an enviable position among the larger cities with respect to the condition of its business property market. He told the realtors at a round table conference that available office space here is 96.9 per cent rented; apartments are 99.62 per cent rented and there are only eight vacancies in the downtown shopping area of a total of 622 store properties.

In discussing the factors which have served to strengthen the market for business properties in Washington, Bangs pointed out that although the Capital is strictly nonindustrial in character, business activity has nevertheless increased "unobtrusively and without detracting from the physical beauty of the city, which the Federal Government strives painstakingly to preserve.

"All types of investment property are now finding a ready market, provided they are reasonably priced. Hundreds of new low-priced homes have been built and sold in Washington and vicinity, many of them financed through building associations and Government agencies. Many brokers are also refinancing mortgage loans which are now due or about to become due.

"There is plenty of money available for large loans on business properties at interest rates of from 4 to 5 per cent, provided they are leased to or owned by responsible business persons and there is a real equity in the property."

Bangs pointed out that in instances of single-purpose buildings, such as theaters, hotels and garages, for which mortgage money is not often readily available, it is possible to apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which recently started to make mortgage money commitments for the erection of this class of property. It is required, of course, that there be a substantial equity in the property and that a real need exists for the improvement in the community where it is to be located, he explained. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation requires that the building be so located and constructed as to insure continued tenancy.

Mortgage Proposal Study Saves $1,000

Newark, N. J.—The careful examination of a mortgage proposal by the Federal Housing Administration staff in the local insuring office was directly responsible recently for saving a prospective home builder $1,000.

After appraisal it was discovered by Housing Administration experts that construction costs as estimated by the contractor were $1,000 too great. The prospective mortgagor was informed of this fact by the New Jersey office.

He interviewed the contractor. Investigation revealed that a mistake had been made in figuring certain costs. The builder agreed that the price of the house should be reduced by $1,000.

Foyer Decorations Have Fine Effect

A small, dark foyer may be brightened considerably by its decorations. The walls of one tiny entrance to a Chicago apartment were painted a dusty pink, the small rug was brown and a leather bench, mirror, table and lamp were white.

The piece de resistance, however, was a bird cage of white and gold, with three sides of glass that had been built on one wall. White procelain birds were decorative and no trouble.

Your foyer may be redecorated by means of modernization funds obtained from a private financial institution insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

Biltwell Places Dwelling on View

prices down. Let's make it possible for everybody to own a car. We will make a smaller profit on each but we will do a great deal more business.'

"What Ford has done for the automobile industry, pre-fabricated houses will do for the housing industry. For example, take the model home recently built by Biltwell at Seabrook. Here is an exceedingly attractive home, five rooms and bath, an amazingly large living room and lots of closet space. Not only is this home remarkably low in price because of its prefabricated steel construction but it is fireproof, lightning-safe, verminproof, windstorm-proof and air conditioned.

"In this beautiful Biltwell home you have the kind of climate you want when you want it, with no more trouble than merely pressing a switch. In the beginning of winter, you light the oil burner and set the machine at whatever temperature you want. This will give you lots of comfort in heating. When summer comes, you simply turn out the oil burner, press another switch and the air is cooled and cleaned at all times and completely changed about 12 times an hour. Imagine all this at a cost of about $50.

Upkeep Cost Is Low.

"And think of the low upkeep, a coat of paint about once every five years is about all that is necessary. And the wear and tear on the furniture is a great deal less because you don't have to open the windows and permit the dust and dirt to blow in.

"Nor are you limited in your choice of design. Biltwell will build you a small place for the seaside for a few hundred dollars or a snappy little four-room and bath cottage, built on your lot for $3,550 or you may have a duplicate of the model home that is $4,750. If you want something with three or four bedrooms prices are in proportion, but whatever you want you can save anywhere from $500 to $2,000 on your home.

"You may have a basement or a storeroom as you prefer. You may have the Cape Cod colonial type or, if you prefer, the flat-roof modernistic home, you may have one. You can even have bay windows. In short, this new fabricated steel home can be built on your lot according to your own ideas. Most amazing of all perhaps is the fact that it can be completed ready for occupancy within three weeks from the time you give your order.

"Easy terms can be arranged. This makes it possible for almost anybody with a few hundred dollars as down payment to own a very attractive home at much less than he now pays for rent."

Mr. Donegan states that he expects to build about 206 of these homes in the next year. He is firmly convinced that by keeping the prices down and giving every man a chance to own a home that people of Washington will take advantage of the low prices.

Sufficient Electricity Outlets Are Advisable

Additional electricity outlets prevent the necessity of unsightly and dangerous extension cords and enables closets, stairs and dark corners to be illuminated.

Capital Parley Of Air Cooling Dealers Called

General Electric Division Men to Open 2-Day Session Tomorrow.

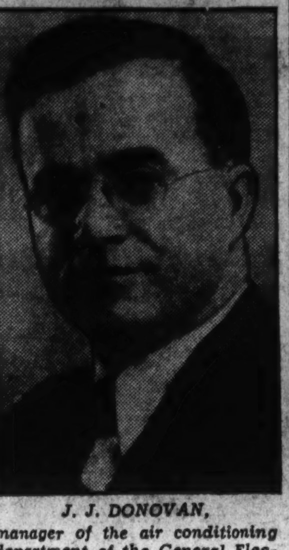
In anticipation of the greatest year in the history of air conditioning, officials of the air conditioning department, General Electric Co., will hold a merchandising conference of its dealers in the Middle Atlantic area at the Shoreham Hotel tomorrow and Tuesday, according to an announcement by Henry W. Heine, president of the Hudson Air Conditioning Corporation, Washington dealer.

J. J. Donovan, manager of the air conditioning department for General Electric, will preside. Department officials who will accompany him to Washington for the conference include E. B. Shiddell, assistant to the manager; A. C. Roy, advertising and sales promotion manager; W. A. Scherff, manager of oil furnace sales; E. J. Opal, manager of the gas furnace division; Elliott Harrington, engineer; R. S. Thurston, sales engineer, and H. C. Williams and A. J. Carmody, district sales managers. Dealer organizations in the following cities will be represented: Baltimore, Harrisburg, Norfolk, Richmond, Roanoke, Wilmington, Washington Philadelphia, Raleigh and Winston-Salem.

"Prospects for the air conditioning industry in 1936 are more optimistic than ever before," Mr. Donovan said in announcing the conference. "The natural growth of this young industry and the great increase in new building and modernization activities have combined in 1935 to result in the largest volume of sales of air conditioning equipment ever recorded in one year. With an even greater advance in these activities foreseen for 1936, we can logically anticipate a similarly increased acceptance for air conditioning.

"This record of past progress and the even more brilliant prospects holds especially true for Washington, and the surrounding area, where both business men and home owners have been particularly responsive to the benefits of air conditioning. The progress of air conditioning for the home has been most marked in Washington, with its great activity in home construction. With its many installations in Government buildings, Washington also leads all other cities in the amount of air conditioned office and public building space. Our dealer conference, which will be devoted to a thorough study of local merchandising conditions, will be a preliminary to the most comprehensive merchandising program the company has yet devoted to air conditioning."

Will Preside



J. J. DONOVAN, manager of the air conditioning department of the General Electric Co., will preside over a merchandising conference of its air conditioning dealers throughout the Middle Atlantic area, to be held at the Shoreham Hotel Monday and Tuesday.

An Extra Window Brightens Kitchen

A dark kitchen gives the housewife a dark outlook on life. There is no need to put up with such an unhappy state of affairs when it is so simple to obtain modernization credit funds from a private financial institution insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

An extra window in the kitchen not only makes the home's workshop a more cheerful place in which to cook and wash dishes, but the additional ventilation made possible will prove a relief in the summer time.

Consult a local carpenter about cutting in an extra window. You will be surprised to find how easily the work can be done.

Dressing RoomDesigned As Marionette Theater

A novel idea for your downstairs dressing room? Guests will rave over one designed by Charles J. Lindenthaler. It has the appearance of a marionette theater. The table is framed to resemble a miniature stage, while dangling marionette figures are painted on the glass.

Display House In Greenwich Draws Crowds

Home Is on a Broad Landscaped Lot, With Beautiful View.

The latest Greenwich Forest display house is attracting constantly increasing groups of visitors. This house now features the beautiful and restricted development of the Cafritz Construction Co., in nearby Maryland. Located at 7117 Hampden lane, this residential offering is located on a broad, landscaped lot, with a frontage of 172 feet and a depth of 134 feet. The view of the surrounding country is beautiful. It affords a vista of gently rolling hills, covered with trees and in the immediate scene the broad roadways traversing Greenwich Forest are lined with the distinguished residential structures characterizing that neighborhood.

The adjoining surroundings are no less attractive. The large site is full of tall and stately trees, the dense foilage of one, in particular, covering the house like a great leafy umbrella in summer. A six-foot concrete driveway leading to a two-car garage enters the lot from the rear.

Of the charming Dutch colonial type of architceture, the model house is sturdily built of red brick and roofed with sea green Vermont slate. The daintiness of the home's outlines surprise the visitors when they enter it and see the large space of its rooms. Every structural discovery making for the improvement of home building has been introduced in its erection.

Thoroughly Waterproofed.

Its complete seasonal insulation is insured by 4 inches of rock wool and three dead-air spaces in its exterior brick walls which are imbedded in waterproof mortar, backed with parging and thoroughly waterproofed. All interior walls are of sheet rock lath. All flashings, guttering and downspouting are of the finest grade of copper. The superstructure walls are 9 inches thick and those of the basement 13 inches thick, the latter being parged with Ironite, making them doubly moisture proof. A complete program of subsoil drainage has been effected. Complete screening, Chamberlain weather-stripping and thorough calking of all exterior openings result in a house well protected against the elements.

Approaching the exhibit dwelling over a terraced brick wall, the visitor enters through an arched doorway to an inviting reception foyer with convenient cloak closet. The latter is but the first of a series of handy closets, some with independent drawers, all well located and illuminated with individual lights and switches.

The spaciousness of the rooms is noted in the comfortable living room, which has a large open fireplace, and measures 13½ by 22½ feet. The dining room is likewise characterized by ample wall and serving space and the well-lighted kitchen in the rear is noted for its roominess.

"All Electric" Kitchen.

The finishing of the walls of the kitchen, which is of the "all-electric health" type, is in Keene cement of the same saitary kind used in hospitals and absolutely dust and dirt proof. All the work space is compactly arranged at one side of the room and the complete cooking equipment in a similar manner at the other. The latter includes General Electric refrigeration, Crawford Graybar range and General Electric ventilating fan. There is a complete Oxford cabinet unit and the work space is brightened by an independent light.

Back of the living room is an unusually pleasing room with a view over the rear yard and the wooded richness of the countryside. This room is readily adaptable for use as a den, study, library or first-floor bedroom. It is equipped with a toilet and bath.

The large and amply lighted basement is divided into utility space, separated from the splendid recreation room. The latter is finished in modernistic style from a color scheme of red, white, black and silver. In the utility section there are the laundry and heating units, the latter featuring a General Electric oil burner. Just one of the many examples reflecting the stability of the home's construction is its steel-hung floor joists.

Brass Electric Fixtures.

The second floor bathrooms are outfitted with the modern neoangle tubs and showers, convenient towel and linen closets and toilets. The walls are in Marbleite. Standard plumbing fixtures are used throughout the house and the electric fixtures are of brass, colonial type. Yale hardware is employed on all the doors.

The bedrooms are all large sized and cross ventilated. The third floor is fashioned into a room that would serve a variety of purposes. It can be used as a billiard room, extra bedroom, nursery or children's playroom, sewing room or for storage. The house has hardwood floors throughout; paneling finished in Dulux and concealed copper fin radiation.

This home will be open for inspection today and daily until 9 p. m. It is furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon. The landscaping of the home in this community, where the natural contours of the land are retained, where no fences are permitted and where the settings of each dwelling harmonize with the others, is by John H. Small & Sons.

The home and Greenwich Forest may be seen by driving out Connecticut or Wisconsin avenue to Bethesda, Md., and following old Georgetown road to Wilson lane at the Women's Farm Market, then turning left on Wilson lane to the entrance of the development at Hampden lane.

Stencil Window Shades.

Either new window shades or old ones that have been freshly painted may be made decorative with a simple stencil design applied in the lower center edge—just above the cord.

Dwellers Keep University Park Standards High

Development of Suburb Proceeds Through Years of Depression.

Although American University Park was not developed by one or a few large realty organizations, the development has been held to a high standard by the vigilance and determination of the home owners who reside in it.

Its citizens' association was organized nearly ten years ago in order to resist an effort to have certain blocks rezoned to permit erection of community or row houses and the united spirit displayed at that time won the sympathy and cooperation of the Zoning Commission. The same spirit and no little hard work on the part of a committee whose names are gratefully remembered achieved another victory less than a year later when there was an attempt to make Massachusetts avenue from Macomb street west available for apartment houses.

For the first five years, this association was under the presidency of Thomas E. Lodge, who during that time and since has given his time and ability to further the aims of the community as well as those of the District as a whole.

Other residents who have served as president are Marshall J. Gleason, D. S. Burch, H. L. Brooks, F. S. Sanford, Gilbert L. Rodier, the late Arthur Carr and W. T. Betts.

The continuous development of American University Park, uninterrupted by the years of business depression and now expanding at a remarkable rate, is attributed in no small part to the extension of gas and electric facilities, bus service and street surfacing, which were fostered by the association.

In this development the annual land, flower and garden contest, which has for most of the period of its existence been a feature of the association's program, has played a part, not only in encouraging residents to keep their properties and the adjacent grounds as attractive as possible, but, in more than one instance, in making District Commissioners and other high officials acquainted with the community as they visited it preparatory to awarding prizes or addressing meetings.

Silvered Finish.

To obtain a silvered or weathered finish on close-grained wood, use a coat of gray stain. When it is dry, rub the surface with a soft rag and small amounts of white paint.

St. Louis Court Writ Prevents Realtor Misuse

Realty Company Enjoined from Using Word or One Like It.

An injunction against unauthorized use of the term realtor has just been issued by the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis in a case brought jointly by the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange and the National Association of Real Estate Boards against the J. W. Kerr Realty Co.

The defendant is permanently enjoined "from the use of the term 'realtor' or words of like appearance, and from the use of the words 'Member, St. Louis Real Estate Exchange' upon their office door, office windows, billboards, sign boards, stationery, calling cards, or newspaper advertising, or on any other material, or on any other place, or in any way on which it may or might be used in connection with the real estate business, or in any other manner, except as applying to a lawfully elected, active member in good standing, of a constituent member board of the National Association of Real Estate Boards."

The new St. Louis decision, signed by Judge M. G. Baron, November 19, is the fourteenth court decision to be handed down sustaining the association's right to the coined term realtor, which was adopted in 1916 as its membership designation.

Protected by State.

Previous decisions enjoining against unauthorized use of the term were by courts of the follow-States: Minnesota, Virginia, Utah, two; Michigan, four; Missouri, two; Maryland, two and by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

New real estate activity is bound to mean heightened need for protection of the public against incompetent and irresponsible operators, the association states. With this in mind, real estate boards of major cities over the country have taken as a principal objective of their work for the coming year establishment of a thorough understanding in their communities of the fact that the term realtor can be used only by persons who have met the membership standard of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and who, in becoming members, have pledged themselves to its code of business ethics and have the benefit of its continuing studies in real estate fundamentals and real estate business practice.

The realtor design, now familiar to the public in cities over the country, thus means business responsibility, standing and competence as recognized by the national association through its local member real estate board, it is pointed out.

This realtor design, oval, with a silhouette of urban skyline, has been registered as the trade mark of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in all jurisdictions which provide for such registration.

With Time, Mencken and Ripley in "Believe It or Not" among the commentators recently public-printing as to the status of the word realtor, the association has opened the way to a wide circulation of the exact definition of the word through a phamplet, entitled, "Realtor—Its Meaning and Use," just off the press.

And here's the definition, set up by the association's constitution:

"A person engaged in the real estate business who is a board member or individual member of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, is subject to its rules and regulations, observes its standards of conduct, and is entitled to its benefits."

The coiner of the term was Charles N. Chadbourne, of the Minneapolis Real Estate Board, long "Father Realtor" to fellow members over the country.

Tip for Bathroom: Venetian Blinds

Can Be Bought Through FHA Credit Plan.

In modernizing a bathroom or kitchen have you ever thought of treating the windows much as you might treat them in any other room of the house?

Modernization credit, obtained from a private financial institution insured by the Federal Housing Administration, may be used for the purchase of Venetian blinds.

One bathroom seen recently had walls of white tile and at the window was hung a Venetian blind which had been painted a bright red. A waterproof paint had been used and the blind could be wiped off with a damp cloth whenever the walls of the bathroom were cleaned.

Avoid Jamming Brush.

When painting—don't jam a brush into corners. It buckles the bristles and spoils it for good work.

Advice of FHA Effects $2,500 Saving in Deal

Los Angeles Newspaper Official Praises Courtesy of Office Staff.

Los Angeles, Calif.—Guy R. Daniel, classified-advertising manager of the Los Angeles Examiner, here, saved $2,500 on the purchase price of a property through advice from Federal Housing Administration underwriters.

In a letter to G. D. King, assistant chief underwriter in the Los Angeles office, he said in part:

"I am writing to thank you personally and also various other members of the Federal Housing Administration for their aid in helping me to secure a Title II loan on my property. Because of your advice and help I was able to save $2,500 on the total purchase price and was able to do a complete remodeling job on the amount of money you enabled me to save.

"I want to emphatically state that all the members of the Los Angeles office of the Federal Housing Administration whom I had occasion to contact while my loan was in the process of being insured were attentive, courteous, and more than considerate, even in the smaller details."

Precaution in Painting.

Federal Policy May Curtail Building Boom

Land Journal Fears High Rent; Crane Co. Predicts Gains.

What is the scope of activity that may be expected from private enterprise in housing for the months just ahead?

In the Journal of Land and Public Utility Economics, published by Northwestern University, Walter S. Schmidt, Cincinnati, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, brings data from many sources, salted by experience, to give the answer, points out that it must be predictated on removal of uncertainty about direct Federal building and entrance of the Federal Government as a landlord at uneconomic rents to demoralize market supply and demand, points out also that action of the Federal agencies may be so adjusted as to avoid this unnecessary fear.

Meantime, Russell G. Creviston, Chicago (Crane Company), chairman of the newly organized Manufacturers Housing Display Council, in a recent address also weighs current data, not only on housing but on commercial and industrial building outlook.

To give first Mr. Creviston's estimate:

"Approximately 40,000 dwelling units were built in 1934, about 70,000 are being built in 1935, and there should be about a 100 per cent increase in 1936. Even today, with our 80 per cent increase over last year, we are not very much above the irreducible minimum of residential building . . . Commercial building is so far but 4 per cent ahead of last year . . . Even though industrial building now is some 20 per cent behind, 1936 should see it rise at least to 20 per cent ahead of 1935. Total building, residential and non-residential, in 1936 will be fully 54 per cent ahead of 1935."

As to new home building he adds:

"With an average family income of $2,000 how can there be a market of the tremendous possibilities outlined? Average family incomes have never appeared to be large, but it is surprising how much this average family can save when it wants to. Our record as a people has demonstrated that seemingly low income averages do not stand in the way of improved home owning. . . . The modern trend offers an entirely new interpretation of what a dwelling place should be. It offers a new conception of design, of use of space, of necessary equipment, and fits in with the spirit and mode of the American people. With our better conception of the market, and with our improvements in building and equipment, we should be able to meet a greater proportion of the real needs for a higher standard of living than ever before."

Mr. Schmidt discusses the normal expectation for housing, and the outlook for private enterprise, aided as it can be by completing the work of mortgage stabilization, limiting governmental building to some definite experimental program in place of the present uncertainties as to Government entrance as a landlord. He sees the following as important elements of the whole question:

1. That there has come a definite swing back to the single-family house. Since 1930, the major portion of construction has been of the single-family type, whereas from 1900 to 1920, apartment house construction was on the increase as compared to one and two-family dwellings.

2. The apartment building, as ordinarily considered, houses but a negligible portion of our families, probably between 8 and 10 per cent, he estimates.

3. As a people we accept as prima facie that he who desires a new home must purchase it. There is practically no building to rent in the single family field.

4. Thus has been sustained and stimulated the distinctive American ideal of home ownership.

5. The desire is not confined to the wealthier class. Department of Commerce figures, taken in 52 cities, show $1,478 as the average income of the American home owner in 1933.

On the other hand, he says, "rentals of the lower income group, who occupy usually the oldest of the residential structures of the community, vary with the city and the location in it from $2.50 to $5 per room, whereas the limited dividend corporations in New York City, although granted concessions in taxes and other items, and although all are charging the allowed maximum of $12 per month per room, still are earning no fair return. They can hardly be said to be serving the low wage group when 500,000 families in that metropolis are paying $6 or less per room. Not today, nor for 35 years, has it been possible to build for the low wage group at any rent that group can afford to pay, whether the improvement is constructed well or ill."

Smart Investor Turns to Realty, Banker Asserts

Field Offers Highest Return for Investment, He Tells Lawyers.

Who is buying real estate today? When Holman D. Pettibone, president of the Chicago Title & Trust Co., one of the largest trust institutions in the country, told the Chicago Bar Association his own observation as to who is in the market, and why, the Illinois office of the Home Owners Loan Corporation made a special report of his statement. The National Association of Real Estate Boards quotes it as indication of the large-scale investor's present thought.

Mr. Pettibone said:

"Today's buyers (of real estate) are smart and thoroughly experienced investors, those who have been accustomed over a period of many years to invest money to yield a current return with some promise of appreciation. Wealthy individuals and larger estates are to be found among the buyers; institutions which want to buy an assured income are also buyers.

"One of the reasons why more attention is being focused on real estate is the difficulty of investing money to yield any suitable return. Highest grade municipal bonds yield from ¾ per cent to 2¾ per cent; commercial paper yields ½ per cent to ¾ per cent. High grade industrial, railroad and utility bonds are selling at prices which return to the investor only a little more than 3 per cent. Stocks of leading corporations are selling at prices which return from 1 per cent to 4 per cent. Funds are offered by large lenders on choice real estate security to return from 4 per cent to 5 per cent to the lender.

"In the residential field, occupancy of rentable space approximates 95 per cent; delinquencies in rent are small; unusual concessions by the landlord, common during the last few years, have largely disappeared. The residential field is moving ahead and is today more active than any other.

"Today's sellers of real estate are those who are in need or those who have become involuntary owners.

"The sellers and buyers of tomorrow will be the public."

Nathan Straus Blames Greed For Tenements

New Yorker Offers Remedy in Industry-Government Partnership.

Unbridled greed is the chief cause of slums, Nathan Straus, president of the Park Association of New York City and a former member of the New York State Senate, said in a recent address at the Riverdale Country School, Riverdale-on-Hudson, N. Y. He urged the students as members of a new generation "to do far better with the problems of human relations than the adults of today have done."

No other problem is of greater importance than that of the slum, Mr. Straus declared, adding that one person in three in New York City lives in a building which in 1900 was declared unfit for housing.

"Some districts pay so little in taxes," he continued, "that the rest of us pay for whatever city protection and service they get. This, however, is less significant than the fact that poor living conditions mean sickness, misery and crime, not just for the slums, but for the entire population. It requires no noble sentiment for our citizenry to become determined upon decent living conditions for everyone, but just plain self-protection and common sense."

Mr. Straus advocated the conversion of slum districts into public parks or into fewer and higher-priced buildings, and the construction of modern houses on new open land for those now in the slums.

"Our Federal Government should lend funds for this purpose at low rates of interest to limited dividends corporations and the local government should become a partner in the enterprise through partial or complete tax exemption," he asserted.

Cash Available For Installation Of Sprinklers

FHA Credit Will Finance Safeguarding of Home, Business Property.

The Federal Housing Administration's modernization credit plan makes possible the improvement and safeguarding of residential and business properties by the installation of sprinkler equipment, which may be obtained with funds procurable at approved private financial institutions.

While automatic sprinkler equipment for larger buildings has been available for many years, it is only recently that a junior installation has been designed especially for the individual dwelling, the small apartment, schools, churches and other small-building occupancies.

The junior system includes all the vital elements of standard automatic sprinkler protection. It is fed from the domestic water supply through flexible copper tubing on which a series of sprinkler heads is mounted. These are special heads which operate rapidly. An alarm feature also is provided.

An interesting feature of the junior sprinkling system is that it can be installed by an experienced plumbing contractor in a few hours.

Exhibit Homes Retain Aspect Of Originality

Groups Carry Out Motive of Design, but Units Are Individual.

laid walnut design. The trim of darker inlaid wood is strikingly attractive. There are two roomy coat closets on either side of the center hall and to the right is the big living room with a log-burning fireplace and French door opening to the side porch. One of the fine features of this house is the electrically equipped kitchen. I was much impressed with the tile drain board, for it will last a lifetime and will withstand hard usage. This tile becomes brighter with every washing and never will look worn or old.

The dining room is well proportioned and roomy and the stairs are wide. On the second floor there are three bedrooms, two having huge closets. I was impressed with the fact that these closets have small windows and are large enough to be converted into dressing rooms. The master bedroom has three closets—one an immense insulated cedar closet. There is an adjoining lavatory in orchid with orchid tile floor and a glass from the lavatory into the shower room. This is one of the prettiest and most novel ideas I have seen. From the lavatory, through the shiny glass door, the lavender shower room appears to be "wrapped in cellophane."

A study or den also adjoins the master bedroom. The main bath is called the "streamlined" bath and is bright with peach tile and sun-tan coloring. A finished attic and basement recreation room complete this charming home. Concealed radiation, an abundance of electrically lighted closets and convenient arrangement of rooms and space are the features which will make this home especially pleasing to women.

Now, to 4341 Nebraska avenue northwest, an exhibit home presented by the Baker Realty Co. This house is furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and is built by Adamson. The location is excellent, on a high elevation overlooking Immaculata Seminary. Shrubs and trees surrounding the place give it the appearance of being "home" and of having been lived in although this house is open today for the first time. Shuttered windows and attic gables give a romantic touch. The door from the living porch opens into the center hall. To the left is the large, cheerful living room with log-burning fireplace and charming wall lamps. An arched doorway leads into one of the sunniest and lightest dining rooms I've seen—it has many windows and a three-way exposure.

This dining room is finished in a rich Boston coffee shade—the woodwork is golden oak, as is the woodwork over the entire house. The wallpaper is in a soft, light brown tone with design of sailing ships. Even the chandelier harmonizes in color in its light brown and gold. The first-floor bedroom has a cedar closet and a connecting lavatory with shower bath. The "electric health kitchen" is conveniently arranged and is equipped with electric range, refrigerator, built-in cabinets and is de luxe equipped.

The two second-floor bedrooms are without doubt among the brightest and sunniest I've seen for many a day. Each has its own large cedar closet and there is a bath. The house has all the advantages of a custom-built home and is designed in such a way that it will suit the most discriminating tastes. The clubroom in the basement is finished in knotty pine panels; has a fireplace, and, in contrast to some basement recreation rooms, it is so arranged that it has many large windows and is flooded with light. In the basement there is also a huge storeroom, laundry room and lavatory. This attractive sunny house will not be on exhibit long, for such a good offer will soon be sold. I advise all of you homeseekers to make a hurried trip to see these exhibit homes. You will surely find just what you have in mind.

Plumbing Equipment Of New Type Advisable

A closet tank ball is small but important part of the plumbing equipment. It is this part of the closet tank mechanism which determines whether the operation of the closet is quiet and efficient or noisy and troublesome.

The replacement of an old and worn out tank ball with a new and improved type is advisable. It is advisable to get the advice of an experienced plumbing contractor in order to be assured of a tank ball that will make a perfect seal.

Safety Shelf Removes Bottle Breakage Danger

The danger that bottles placed on top of the closet tank cover will slide off and break on the bathroom floor is prevented by a new safety-shelf which can be securely attached to the tank cover. The shelf has a guard-rim around it. It is rust-proof, solid, and adjustable to any closet tank. It is made of heavily chromium-plated brass and is easily installed without tools.

Hints Offered In Decoration Of Fireplace

Pair of White Five Finger Vases Would Lend Note of Formality.

Fireplaces may be a focal point of interest in a room, but the arrangement of articles on the mantel very easily becomes tiresome. It is a wise housewife who changes such an arrangement frequently.

It has become a sort of "old American custom" to have a mirror or picture centered above the mantel, a pair of something or other on either end and a clock or bowl of fruit or flowers in the middle. Basically, this is a perfectly good arrangement. The systematic way it is used, however, may be faulty. Try a pair of pictures on either side of the wall and a set of porcelain figures in the center of the mantel. Or try sconces on the wall just to the far side of the mantel, and bowls of trailing ivy on the shelf.

An extremely modern arrangement would be an article on either end of the shelf, but not a matching pair. A pair of white five finger vases would lend a note of formality.

If you don't have a fireplace in your home, funds may be obtained through a private financial institution insured by the Federal Housing Administration to build one.

Fence Is Popular After Long Disuse

The fence is once again gaining in popularity. At one time it was symbolical of a man's domain, but in recent years it fell into disuse and long lines of unbroken green lawn from one end of the block to the other were considered "the thing."

Modernization credit may be obtained from private financial institutions insured by the Federal Housing Administration. These funds may be used for the addition, alteration, repair or improvement to property. Building of fences is one of the uses to which the money may be put.

Fences serve a triple purpose. they add to the appearance of a property, they set off the boundary lines and prevent trespassers from trampling grass and flowers. Picket, rail, brick, stone or iron types may be found to suit various architectural styles.

Inflation Peril Warning Again Issued by Gay

Nation Is Under Sway of False Philosophy, Says Exchange Head.

Los Angeles, Dec. 7.—Speaking at a dinner of the California Bankers Association here tonight, Charles R. Gay, president of the New York Stock Exchange, issued another warning against the peril of inflation as a possible result of the present immense and swelling bank reserves. Legislation also, he said, was another danger in the path of recovery, because, he explained, "a false and unhappy economic philosophy has seized the people of this country.

"It is the unanimous judgment of informed economists and practical men of finance that the inevitable economic processes of recovery are at work in our country, and elsewhere throughout the world," he said. "The processes of deflation and liquidation have practically exhausted themselves, even though there are in certain economic areas grave problems of debt and markets and income not yet solved. Recovery is definitely on the way.

"But in our own country this recovery is accompanied by new and strange conditions that give us pause. The point is that in its efforts to stimulate this price rise, the Government has subjected our money system to violent and unprecedented treatment. As a result we do not have at this time any permanent money standard. The dollar has been devalued to 59 cents and is subject to further devaluation at any time. As a result of devaluation we have drawn more than $2,000,000,000 in gold from a sorely pressed Europe to add to our already excessive holdings. This gold base of our currency is not at present a working base, as our currency is not freely redeemable.

Deposit Expansion.

"The expenditures of the Government are being financed in two ways, by heavy taxation which eats into capital accumulation and investment funds, and by bank loans. These loans from the banks tend to create a vast expansion of deposits not founded on self-liquidating commercial and industrial activity. The provisions of the banking laws now in operation permit an expansion of credit growing out of these various conditions that is beyond all possible need of business and finance on a wholesale and normal scale.

"In other words, there are present in our country the materials of an abnormal and swollen price and investment condition during the inevitable recovery process. Some able men see a large inflation of prices as unavoidable. Some observers profess to see in the recent activity in the stock market the first onset of this inflationary tide, notwithstanding the fact that it has not been accompanied by a corresponding rise in brokers' loans.

Inflation Is Possible.

"With that view I am not yet ready to agree nor am I yet ready to concede that inflation is inevitable, though I fully recognize its possibility. Under existing banking laws there is a means of controlling, to some degree, the flow of credit, and we have every hope that this means will be used if the need should arise.

"The path of recovery is not only beset by the perils of inflation. It may be made insecure by legislation. In recent years a false and unhappy economic philosophy has seized the people of this country. It is the philosophy that every problem of resources and production has been solved, that we live in an age of endless abundance. It matters not that this has been over and over again disproved by statistics and economics alike. It has seized hold of the people. If there are poverty and low wages and scant living it must be due, they say, to deficient consumer power. Hence the final solution of all economic problems is forced spending.

"The general adoption by government of this philosophy of spending may easily mean the end of our present economic order. For this philosophy condemns saving and applauds waste. Carried to its logical conclusion, it means the end of wealth and the restriction of production to bare necessities. No nation that abandons thrift and saving and investment can avoid a reversion to savagery. It means the early destruction of the value of savings accounts, life insurance policies, bonds, estates, and endowments. It would destroy alike the functions of banks and of investment markets."

Wheat Prices Rally After Early Losses

Curtailment of Surplus in Argentina a Source of Support.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 7.—Surprising curtailment of trade estimates of this season's Argentine exportable wheat surplus led late today to price rallies here that more than offset early losses.

The new estimates of Argentina's wheat available for shipment overseas were construed in Chicago as indicating that only 18,000,000 bushels from Argentina would be obtained for Europe. The smallest amount in many years.

Wheat in Chicago closed irregular, ½ cent off to ⅝ up, compared with yesterday's finish: May, 95¾ to 95⅞; corn, unchanged to ¼ higher; May, 59¼ to 59⅜; oats ⅛ to ⅜ advanced, and provisions exactly unchanged.

Market Gains New Impetus From Upturn in Business

Merchandise and Metal Shares Lead Advances in Brisk Half-Day Session; Bonds Steady; Wheat Rallies.

By Frank MacMillen,

Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Dec. 7.—In somewhat faster trading, the stock market, led by merchandise and metal shares, pushed up for gains of fractions to 2 or more points today. The rise, brokers said, reflected the financial district's emphasis on continued favorable business news which momentarily arrested more attention than the foreign situation.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks rose 0.5 of a point to 55.7. The turnover totaled 1,318,720 shares.

While activity was concentrated in a few groups during the early trading, buying spread to the entire list to include numerous prominent industrials by the close.

New Highs Reached.

A handful of issues reached or exceeded the year's highs to close with gains of fractions to 2 or more points. This batch included American Smelting at 64¼, Anaconda at 28½, Cerro De Pasco at 65, Douglas Aircraft at 38¼, Food Machinery at 68, Gimbel Brothers at 7½, International Nickel at 47¼ and Motor Products at 60¾.

The new shares of Coca-Cola soared to a record high of 83¼, and closed at 83, up 7⅞. The old shares were split last month four-for-one.

Demand for copper issues was explained in market circles by the opinion trade recovery and possible further gains by the heavy industries will stimulate demand for the red metal. Large power output also brings nearer the day when utility companies may increase their copper use, some said.

Evidence of the best retail holiday business in the past few years apparently retained its influence for store issues, including Macy, Montgomery Ward and Sears Roebuck, which scored gains of fractions to more than a point.

Foreign Outlook Ignored.

Fractional gains scored by a representative list of important issues indicated to most that the financial community was keeping its equanimity despite confusing foreign developments. These equities included American Telephone at 159¾, Chrysler at 83¼, General Electric at 38, General Motors at 55, U. S. Steel at 48¼ and Westinghouse at 93⅛. Rail equities kept to the background with limited advances.

What industrial news there was continued in the groove marked "favorable," observers said. The highest daily ingot production rate for any November since 1929 was reported by the American Iron & Steel Institute. At 121,279 tons, the figure compared with 116,535 tons in October and 61,947 in November last year.

That sales of automobiles were whirring along at a good clip was indicated by preliminary estimates of the Automobile Manufacturers Association which put November production at 67 per cent ahead of any corresponding month. The best previous November total was 1925 when the total was 177,643.

Bonds were steady. Wheat finished ½ cent a bushel lower to ⅝ higher and corn was unchanged to ¼ higher. Cotton was unchanged to 15 cents a bale up. The French franc was off .00¼ of a cent at 6.60½ cents. The pound sterling was ½ a cent higher at $4.93.

Exports of Cotton Double Last Year

New York, Dec. 7.—Exports of American cotton were larger this week than in the corresponding week last year, according to the weekly report of the New York Cotton Exchange. They totaled 352,000 bales against 179,000 last year. Total exports during the season to date are 2,705,000 bales, against 2,028,000 in the corresponding period of last season.

Forwardings to mills of the world were 280,000 bales this week against 258,000 last year. Total forwardings for the season to date are 4,460,000 bales against 3,856,000 for the same period of last season.

Best December In 6 Years Seen For Business

Expansion of Wholesale and Retail Trade Is Predicted.

New York, Dec. 7.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co. says:

"The business outlook for December indicates that both industrial production and trade generally will continue to make a satisfactory showing. The Standard Statistics Co. index of industrial production for the month is estimated at 78.8, compared with 77.0 for November and 68.0 for December, 1934. The current figure is the highest for any month since September, 1930, and is the best December showing since 1929.

"Trade prospects for December may be summarized briefly as follows:

"Automobile production will remain satisfactory and total output will probably not decline materially from the high level in November.

"Steel activity will probably decline moderately and it is estimated that operations will average around 50 per cent for the month, compared with about 55 per cent for November.

"Electric power production is expected to be maintained at or near record levels.

"Carloadings will decline because of seasonal factors, but comparisons with year-earlier figures are expected to remain favorable.

"Numerous industries, including textiles, building, lumber and shoes, will probably reduce operations because of seasonal influences.

"Retail and wholesale trade should be very active, given seasonable weather conditions."

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 7.—Profit-taking after yesterday's large advance, coupled with hesitancy in Wall street, caused prices to turn irregular and indecisive on the bourse today. The closing was hesitant.

Berlin—After a rather quiet session, the boerse closed dull today.

London—Closed.

Factory Output Value Reaches Recovery High

Dollar Volume for Ten Months 18% Above a Year Ago.

New York, Dec. 7.—The value of factory output rose in October to a new peak for the recovery movement, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. While the price level was slightly lower in October than in September, the decrease was more than offset by the increase in output. At the same time, prices were considerable higher than in July 1933. Consequently, the failure of production to quite reach the peak in that month did not prevent the value of the output from attaining a new high for the recovery movement.

The value of factory production for the first ten months was 18.0 per cent higher than a year ago. Despite this fact, it now appears that there has been less overexpansion than was previously indicated. Farm income, which is a measuring rod for the value of factory output when allowance is made for periodic increases in the ratio of the value of factory output to farm income, now promises to be higher than a year ago. The 1935 index of farm income, on the basis of 1923-1925 as 100, is currently estimated at 68.8 as compared with the previous estimate of 64.6 which was the same as in 1934. The farm income index is thus not far below the index of the value of factory output which was 73.6 for the first ten months.

Preliminary reports provide little evidence of curtailment of manufacturing activity since October and it now is questionable whether much of a recession will occur during December. Even so, it is apparent that the annual index of the value of factory output will not show an unprecedented excess over the index of farm income. Moreover, this may not represent a real excess in view of the possibility that an upward adjustment of the ratio of the value of factory output to farm income is now taking place.

FHA Officials Hail Response To Housing Act

Loans Under Single Mortgage Plan Up to Dec. 3 Total $226,996,551.

Within the short space of 14 months, since the inception of the Federal Housing Administration's program, private financial institutions throughout the country have in the great majority of cases awakened to the many advantages embodied in the national housing act, it is announced by representatives of the foregoing administration.

Where in the early months after the passage of the act, scores of banks were either apathetic or even antagonistic to the plan, today such institutions are actually competing for mortgages insured under the "Single Mortgage System," they state.

The same, they remind, applies to the modernization credit plan, which, they state, has proved itself to be an innovation in financial centers and has convinced thousand of bankers that the insured character loan is an excellent and desirable type of investment. The $226,996,551 already lent up to December 3 under this plan, has been made by the 6,010 private financial institutions insured against loss by the Federal Housing Administration.

Although slow in starting because of the necessity for changes in State laws, the "Single Mortgage System" has now taken root in the national financial strata, they announce, and banks and other mortgage lending agencies in every State in the Union in ever-increasing numbers are soliciting this type of business.

Up to December 3, there were 4,050 private financial institutions approved as mortgagees by the Federal Housing Administration, which had submitted for appraisal, urban home mortgages, totaling $234,778,324.

Officials say that there are many indications in various parts of the country of the complete change in attitude among scores of financial institutions toward the Federal Housing Administration's program. Besides seeking mortgage business outside of their own communities, banks are also in some cases offering bonuses to dealers and contractors for mortgage and modernization loan prospects, it is reported. In other sections, they are cutting interest rates in order to attract lenders, it is announced.

Great stimulus was given to modernization activity within the last six months when a consolidated insurance reserve was created for modernization loans with a maximum of $2,000 as well as to those up to $50,000, it is stated. In this way, large insurance reserves built up by banks after many month's operation under the modernization credit plan were combined with relatively smaller reserves built up by banks under the recently enacted $50,000 extension of the modernization credit plan, it is explained.

Arizona Project Spurs Other Work

Winslow Lumber Firm Reports $100,000 Sales Gain.

Winslow, Ariz.—Modernization of a business establishment here immediately resulted in similar improvements on four other stores in the business district. Approximately $100,000 was spent on the four projects, according to the Federal housing insuring office here.

The local manager of the Babbitt Lumber Co. reports that immediately after a modernization job was completed on a residential property he was able to sell six other remodeling jobs within 500 feet of the original project.

The lumber company's sales, it is said, are running approximately $100,000 ahead of sales in 1934. More than one-third of this increase is directly attributable to business financed under the Federal Housing Administration's modernization credit plan.

Built-In Shelves For Living Room

Effective on Each Side of Fireplace.

Most living rooms, no matter how attractively furnished, grow tiresome if the decorations are not occasionally changed.

An effective improvement is built-in book shelves on each side of the fireplace. They will add character to a room, improving it out of all proportion to the trouble and expense involved.

Other effects may be obtained with built-in window seats and wall cabinets.

Breakfast Nook Popular With U. S. Housewives

An innovation growing in popularity among American housewives is the breakfast nook. By applying wainscoting to the lower half of two corner walls and investing in two built-in hardwood benches and a table it is possible to add another "room" to the house. Wainscoting is available in many attractive designs: Imitation marble, tile, and color panels.

Changing of Piping Requires Experience

When it is necessary to change piping, especially when soil and waste pipes have to be cut, have an expert plumbing contractor to do the job. Don't rely on the handy-man. Such work requires experienced hands, since its proper handling concerns the health of the entire family.

Keep Paint Covered.

Don't leave paint uncovered over night.

Letters of Philo the Penguin

By H. I. Phillips

Dear Ed: If there is one thing that marks a genuine change from the American people's attitude of panic, pessimism and despair to one of optimism, assurance and lightheartedness again, it is the boom in the automobile industry. Although the public did not generally realize what was going on, the leading automobile factories were having something of a boom year and millions of Americans were again getting up enough courage to sign on the dotted line and drive home in a car that didn't look like an abandoned peanut roaster.

* * * *

The figures which have recently come out show that the Big Three in the auto industry have been doing a rushing business all year, and if there was any skepticism about the public's being back in the market for presentable looking motor cars again the crowds at the recent auto shows, especially the national show in New York last month, torpedoed it. The demand for new and snappy automobiles in America is genuine, and it is a great change from the last four or five years when, if a man was lucky enough to have a car, it was so old and battered that he felt ashamed when he drove around town in broad daylight.

* * * *

As goes the automobile industry, so goes the country. One of the immediate aftermaths of the first year of the depression was the complete disappearance of new-car buyers. In the second year of the slump it was unusual to see a bright shiny new bus on the roads, and during 1933 the American automobile parade looked as if it were being staged for comedy effect. You could stand on any highway and watch the cars file by for hours at a time without seeing anything that resembled a smart automobile.

Nine out of ten machines were suffering from old age, general debility, asthma and the rapid approach to a complete breakdown. A car with two front headlights intact was a novelty, and if a man drove around town in a car with a non-shimmying fender he made himself conspicuous. A friend of mine appeared one Sunday afternoon in 1933 in a car with a spare tire behind and he was accused by everybody of putting on airs.

* * * *

The empty spare-tire holder was really the symbol of hard times in this country. For a long time the average man seemed to feel ill at ease if the front windshield wasn't cracked, the rear bumper dragging and the roof beginning to curl up at the edges. If a fellow had a car with one door missing, he took particular satisfaction in it. It sort of established him as a man who was living within his means, and as far as paint goes there were thousands of Americans who would no more think of driving around in a car with any signs of paint or varnish on it than they would think of standing in the middle of Main street in a Russian sable overcoat, smoking a 50-cent cigar and shouting "Hooray for Coolidge prosperity!"

* * * *

During the depths of the depression the worse a car looked the better the owners seemed to like it, and they were particularly happy when it was covered with muck, dust and grime. Washing a car was pretty much of a luxury during the worst part of the slump and was generally accepted as an offensive gesture indicating opulence. In fact, it would surprise us if we ever knew accurately how many thousand cars managed to run all through the years between 1929 and 1935 without oil or grease.

* * * *

The real place to see those battered boilers was in the South and Middle West. In some of the rural districts there seemed to be a deliberate attempt to age automobiles just as a man would age a pipe. An owner would leave his car out in the middle of the lot night and day, and the rustier it got the more satisfied he seemed to be. It seemed to give him a feeling that he wasn't outraging decency.

* * * *

When a man drove around the village in a car with the roof missing, both bumpers dragging, the windshield patched with strips of paper, the radiator leaking and the doors hanging by one screw, he seemed strangely contented. For a time I began to fear that the American public was developing a distinct aversion to anything neat, pretty and well kept in the automobile line.

* * * *

These were tough years on the automobile dealers. You could walk into any auto salesroom and do a jig in the middle before the salesmen would wake up. And even then they would give you a look of resentment and go right back to sleep again. People went to the auto shows every year, but all they took home were the circulars.

* * * *

There was a time in 1931, you may remember, when the automobile manufacturers got together and seriously talked of chipping into an enormous fund to buy up old cars and throw them into the junk heaps as a defensive measure. But all this has been changing during the last 18 months and old Jasper P. Citizen is now to be seen tooling up and down Main street in a car that looks fit for a human being to occupy. The notion that an automobile should be worm-eaten, full of mice and all shot to pieces in order to give comfort and correct transportation has suddenly disappeared.

* * * *

Americans are beginning to be sensitive about making a bad appearance again. Looking like a tramp on the way to a masquerade in a car that won first prize as an antique at the county fair is no longer a thrill. And the people who could afford some of the so-called luxuries of life but were not inclined to admit it are opening up the pursestrings again. It looks like a big year for the gasoline stations and the body polish makers.

Yours,

PHILO THE PENGUIN.

Building Is Spurred By FHA Mortgages

Salt Lake City, Utah.—That the Federal Housing Administration's "Single Mortgage System" has materially stimulated building activity here is shown in a comparison of building permits issued for the first nine months of 1935 with the number of Federal Housing Administration contracts issued for insurance within the city limits for the same period.

During the first nine months of 1935 93 permits were issued for the construction of residential properties, amounting to $384,395.

During the same period 57 contracts for insurance covering new construction, totaling $191,400, were issued by the Federal Housing Administration's local insuring office

U.S. Mortgage Insurance Held Good Security

44 State Banks Recognize Status of Loans Under Housing Act.

Bank commissioners in 44 States have moved to establish Federal Housing Administration insured mortgages in State bank portfolios as "securities of continuing return" even in face of default, it was announced recently by Robert M. Catharine, deputy Federal housing administrator.

"Some misunderstanding on the part of approved lending institutions over recent rulings by State banking commissioners," he said, "on classification of mortgage loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration needs clarification.

"Banking departments in 44 of the 48 States have issued instructions to bank examiners that mortgages insured under the national housing act should not be considered 'slow, doubtful or loss.' This classification, which is the same as national bank examiners use under instructions from the Comptroller of the Currency, is warranted because lending agencies are assured a continuing return for the use of their money invested in insured mortgages even though the borrower may fail to meet his payments.

"Typical of the action being taken by the various banking departments is this statement by Roy A. Haines, bank commissioner of Kansas, in his instructions to Kansas bank examiners: 'Because the insurance provided under the provisions of the national housing act for loans of this type, and because debentures of the mutual mortgage insurance fund issued in exchange for property securing mortgages, which are insured prior to July 1, 1937, shall be fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, you are instructed not to classify such loans held by State banks as slow, doubtful or loss, provided, in cases of default the necessary steps have been taken to continue said insurance in effect'."

The four remaining States whose banking departments have taken no action are Georgia, Mississippi, Kentucky and Virginia. The latter three, because their legislatures have not met since passage of the housing act, have had no opportunity to amend State laws to permit State banks to make maximum loans of 80 per cent allowed under the housing act. The enabling legislation for Georgia was vetoed. In all four States, however, national banks are making maximum loans, while State banks and other financial institutions under State control are making loans up to the maximum permitted under the various State laws.

Reporter's Needs Fulfilled by FHA

Elmira, N. Y.—A heating plant and other necessary repairs to his home and a refinanced mortgage repayable on convenient terms have removed several worries from the mind of C. J. Milliken, reporter of the Star Gazette here—thanks to the national housing act.

Mr. Milliken first read of the "Single Mortgage System" and the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration in his own newspaper. He discussed the matter with a field representative and arranged a $6,100 mortgage. Mr. Milliken explained that he would be unable to live in his home this winter unless he could finance the installation of a new heating plant.

Arrangements were made whereby he could refinance the mortgage, purchase a heating plant, shingles for gables, and necessary paint. Total repairs allowed amounted to $500. Payments on the obligation will amount to $61.33 monthly and will be completely amortized in 19 years and 8 months.

Warping Is Danger In Storing Screens

Improper Method Will Damage Wire Cloth.

When the screens are taken down to be stored away for winter, they should be carefully gone over and repaired. They should then be stored in such a way that the frames will not be warped.

Either stand them up in racks or lay them flat.

If you stack them, be sure the surface on which they are stacked is level and then see that each screen is placed on the one below so that it rests squarely on the frame.

Improper storage will damage the wire cloth and warp the frames so that they will not fit and will soon be broken through forcing.

Texas Bank Hails Single Mortgages

Prepares to Operate in 100-Mile Radius.

Bellville, Tex.—In order to have funds to invest in mortgages insured under the Federal Housing Administration's "Single-Mortgage System," the First National Bank here recently disposed of a large block of securities.

The bank is so favorably impressed with this form of investment that it has signified its willingness to accept mortgages written in towns within a 100-mile radius of this city.

At the present time a number of mortgages are being prepared for submission to the Federal Housing Administration insuring office in Houston.

Dark-Walled Room Needs More Light

Dark walls soak up light just as a sponge soaks up water.

A dark-walled room not exceptionally well illuminated by daylight will be dark in the daytime and will require more electricity to supply sufficient light in the evening.

Light is like water in more ways than one. Like water, light will fit any container. And, speaking of containers, you've undoubtedly noticed how clean water in a dirty container looks dirty. But clean water in white porcelain is bright and sparkling.

So with light. With dull, dark walls, it's dim and struggling. With clean, light-tinted walls, both electric bulbs and daylight spread their radiance in full strength.

Porch Turned Into Sun Room Adds Comfort

Knotty Pine Walls Decorative and Offer Protection Against Wind.

There was a time when every fashionable home had a sun room. Then through the years, this room, which had been all-important, fell into disuse. Sometimes the baby was placed there in his carriage when mother was too busy to take him for a walk, but generally it was used only as a storage place for the vacuum cleaner and the tennis racquet which needed restringing.

One enterprising home owner decided to restore the sun parlor to its place in the sun—theoretically and literally. By using modernization funds obtained from a private financial institution insured by the Federal Housing Administration, the porch was transformed and the family gained a second living room.

The walls were paneled in knotty pine. This served a double purpose. It was decorative and was an added protection against winter winds. A flooring of wide planks was laid over the porch flooring, with an insulated lining to keep out cold drafts.

Bookcases Built.

Bookcases were built in a recess of the wall, with cupboards underneath. The French doors which led from the living room to the porch were replaced by double wooden doors, insuring privacy for both rooms and in keeping with the general trend of the new living room.

A pine scalloped molding was used around the room and the ceilings were painted a deep cream. The center porch light was replaced by an electric fixture suitable to the style of the room. The entire house was air-conditioned and the sun porch register was placed under the step which led to the living room.

Simple Furniture Selected.

With this attractive background, the housewife decided on simple, sturdy furniture. With her own funds she purchased a table and four maple chairs which could be used for dining or bridge playing. The table was also an excellent place to spread a dress pattern. A divan and two occasional chairs of a type suitable for a mountain lodge were also purchased. Small Indian rugs were used and two standing lights could be moved conveniently.

Three Factors Are Essentials In Living Room

Comfort, Beauty, Practicality Combine to Make Perfect Formula.

By Lynn Hardesty.

New York.—Architects and decorators recognize today that behind the actual furniture, wall colors and accessories that comprise the modern living room there must be three factors: comfort, beauty and practicality. Comfort—that blissful sinking into deep-cushioned chairs and divans—can be completely nullified by clashing, ill-chosen colors in the surroundings. And the comfort of having a table for ash tray, book and lamp right at your elbow can be rendered hollow if the table is so perishable that you must worry about marring the table top or ruining its surface with an inadvertently spilled glass. But comfort, beauty and practicality, skillfully interwoven, prove the perfect formula.

Taking these three factors as a starting point, thoughtful decorators and homemakers are weaving them into living room designs that make thoroughly enjoyable backgrounds for those individuals who will spend their time in the rooms.

Some people enjoy building a room around a definite theme. There is, for instance, the apartment living room of the Paul Whitemans' which overlooks Central Park. It has been designed to be a "Rhapsody in Blue" room and combines various tints and tones of blue with accents of contrasting colors. The walls are powder blue and the other tones of the room range from ivory to a shell color and then lemon yellow and coral. The carpet is a dusty powder blue, too. The grand piano has been painted ivory white and there's always a crystal vase on it filled with long-stemmed calla lilies. The window wall is hung with ivory and lemon yellow and another wall is nearly covered with bookshelves that have a blue-mirrored background.

Over the sofa is the picture that gives the room its color theme—a painting of Paul Whiteman conducting. Done by an Italian artist, it combines all the shades of blue that are introduced into the inviting living room.

An entirely different type of living room is the quaint kitchen-sitting room designed by Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne and displayed at a prominent Manhattan store. The floor: nearly covered with a rag rug in faint, varicolored stripes, with gray wool fringe. Painted furniture, with elaborate designs of flowers and fruit, grouped comfortably. The windows: curtained in blue and white checked gingham, with a ruffle of the same gingham in red and white, and glass curtains of red dotted white swiss.

Decorators are recommending painted walls particularly this year because the velvety smoothness of such a finish not only adds immeasurably to the beauty of a room but supplies the quality of practicality so much to be desired. They are also advocating mar-proof finishes for end tables and ash tray stands, so that the third attribute—comfort—can be derived from these pieces of furniture just as surely as it can be from deep-seated couches and chairs.

Home Show Dates For Cities Fixed

Baltimore Exhibition Will Open on Jan. 4.

Definite dates were annonced recently by the Exhibition Unit of the Federal Housing Administration for the first of the series of National Home Shows to be held in different cities during the next few months. Those set to date are Baltimore, January 4 to 11; Houston, January 11 to 18; San Diego, January 15 to September 9 (at the reopening of America's Exposition); Miami, January 25 to February 1; Louisville, February 27 to March 7; and Detroit, February 14 to 23. Others will be announced later.

These shows are to be operated by local organizations under rules and regulations laid down by the Manufacturers Housing Display Council, an organization of national manufacturers of building products. Ultramodern equipment and display effects are being furnished in several units by the Federal Housing Administration as its contribution to this movement by which the public is to be informed of the advantages to be derived from the national housing act.

The 1936 series of Home Shows is expected to outstrip all other ventures of similar nature ever presented. Local real estate boards, civic agencies, and municipal governments are cooperating in the movement, together with newspapers and radio stations.

Mickey Mouse Designs Painted on Ambulance

In Manchester, England, the ambulance of the children's hospital has been gaily painted with designs borrowed from Walt Disney's drawings. The idea behind this novel effort in van painting is that when small patients see Mickey Mouse on the van, something of the fear inherent in all that appertains to hospital treatment will be dispelled. Mr. Disney is pleased with this novel use of his work to do a little to counteract the normal dread of going to the hospital and he is designing a "Silly Symphony" scheme for a new ambulance.

This Design Provides Interesting Dining Room

An interesting dining room has a coral colored ceiling, pale gray painted walls, and jade green woodwork and draperies. The brown of the floor is repeated in the coloring of the furniture and the pleasant tint of the ceiling is echoed in the light shades on the chandelier and in the dishes in the corner cabinet.

View Obstructed By Glass Curtains

Does your house boast a bay window or a very wide window with a view? It always seems a shame to hide an attractive view with glass curtains no matter how good looking the curtains may be.

After the housewife has made improvements to her home, either through the use of the Federal Housing Administration's Modernization Credit Plan or private funds, she wants to make changes in the furnishings and decorations of various rooms.

A New York apartment which had a bay window in the dining room overlooking the river solved the problem of window treatment by hanging draperies at the side and leaving the window free. Across the sills of all three windows tiny plants in identical pots were placed. This detracted from a feeling of bareness but did not hide the view.

Colonial Period Furniture Goes Well for Attics

Slanting Ceilings, Dormer Windows Good Setting for Simple Pieces.

Colonial cottage furniture is particularly adaptable to an attic room and the home owner who modernizes might bear this in mind if she plans to convert a part of the attic into a useful room.

Slanting ceilings and the dormer windows frequently found in the top floor of a house can easily be made a cozy setting for simple furniture. In the absence of dormer windows a small-paned window may replace one of the ordinary type to carry out the general trend. This is one of the many improvements that can be made under the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration. Funds for this work may be obtained through private financial institutions and insured by the Housing Administration.

Attic Room for Student.

One attic, which was made into a room for the son of the family, who was a high school student, had a dado of pine paneling. The walls were covered with a scenic wallpaper, the figures depicting colonial life. A composition covering, which looked like red tiling, was used on the floor.

A nondescript window which rattled in the winter winds and was stubborn about being raised was replaced with a leaded window. A bookcase was built in one wall, surrounded by a scalloped molding. An interesting feature of decoration was an old glass bottle, one of a collection. The mother wanted to use it in the room, but it was too tall to stand upright in the bookcase. She placed it on the top shelf on its side, where its deep blue color added a note of color in the maple-colored bookcase.

Modernization funds were augmented by the family purse. Furniture and furnishings were purchased by the housewife with her own funds.

Maple Furniture.

Electric light plugs were placed where they would be convenient to the main pieces of furniture. Beside the bed and over the desk old coach lanterns were used in place of regulation fixtures.

Blue chintz with white stars was used for curtains and for a dust ruffle on the bed. A white tufted spread was used as a cover. The wall paper had a white background with red, blue, green, and brown in the designs. The ceiling was white.

A trestle table placed in the window alcove served as a desk and the person sitting at it could get the best possible light on his work. A globe of the world with its bright colors was an important part of the room's decoration and was extremely useful to the student

Most of the furniture was maple, but one chair and the table which held the globe had been painted a dull blue by the young man himself. A miniature coach and four was the only decoration on the chest of drawers, giving the room a stern, masculine appearance.

Don't Shovel Snow From Flat Roofs

Careful Examination for Cracks Advisable.

Before winter is fully upon us, all flat roofs should be examined carefully to see that the summer sun has not cracked or blistered them and that the flashing and counterflashing are in proper order.

Deep snow on a roof will find crevices that the summer rains will miss, for the snow, piled up as it is, seeks out cracks that are inches above the roof surface.

Do not attempt to shovel snow off flat roofs, as you are very apt to damage the roof surface with the shovel.

Here's a Novel Idea For Clothes Closets

A clothes closet that grows up—along with the "littlest girl" of the household—is a novel idea. Its features are: a low rod, that can be raised as dresses and coats are lengtnened; easily reached compartments for shirts, panties, sweaters and sleepers—so that Sister Sue learns to put everything in its place; a section for hats and berets.

On one door is a hook for her nightie and a rack for her bedroom slippers. Above them on a painted blue background sails a new moon and silver stars—an indication that the garment below is for nighttime. On the door opposite is painted the rising sun, a reminder that the bathrobe hung beneath is for morning wear. Painted on each compartment are the names of the garments to be found within—to help the littlest girl learn her letters.

Housing Loans Solve Problem Of Small Room

Couple Who Bought Old House Enabled to Knock Out Impeding Walls.

Home owners who delight in making over very old houses frequently run into the difficulty of having too many small rooms without enough space in any one apartment. This is particularly true of the homes that were built in the early days of New England.

Near Madison, Conn., stood an old house, built before the Revolution. When the last member of the original family died the property fell into disrepair. It was part of a large estate and in an out of the way location.

A New York newspaperman and his wife acquired the property for the proverbial song about five years ago. The depression came along and their dreams of doing great things with the old house faded. In the glow of the first pride of possession they had scrubbed it from top to bottom, but there the renovation ended.

FHA Comes to Rescue.

They spent a few week-ends at their "country place" during the summer but lack of conveniences and inefficient fireplaces soon dispelled the dreams of a roaring fire within and snow without in the winter time. With the enactment of the national housing act and the formation of the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration, their dreams were renewed. They borrowed from a private financial institution the $2,000 maximum obtainable under the plan for the modernization of private homes. They worked wonders on the old house, whose good basic construction, the couple had, of course, ascertained before buying.

The house boasted a living room and a den but neither room was large. By knocking out walls and doing away with a small hall, a room approximately 16 by 20 feet was obtained. The stairs to the upper floors went up from this room. The inefficient fireplace was rebuilt and now blazing logs warm heart and body of the room's occupants.

Varied Improvements.

One side of the room was paneled in pine and the eroded brick of the original fireplace was replaced by new red brick. The remaining walls of the room were papered with a typical American pattern—dull, terra cotta leaves on a cream background.

Glass doors were placed at the entrance to what had been a back hall and which the new owners choose to use as a main entrance to their house. A door from the living room, which was the original main entrance, leads to a terrace and the visitor approaches by a flagstone path leading to the side door. This obviates the annoyance of the casual caller arriving in the middle of a family conference in the living room.

The small-paned windows were weather stripped and the wide board floors scraped and painted. Adequate electric plugs were placed about the room.

Over a period of years the owners had been collecting early American furniture for which the house was a perfect setting.

Use Similar Types In Mixing Paint

The three primary colors—red, yellow and blue—can be intermixed to produce all other colors as well as a neutral gray.

In mixing paint, however, always use similar types—enamel with enamel, lacquer with lacquer, etc.

White is properly one of the most extensively used colors for exterior painting. It is always in good taste, no matter what the size or architecture of the house. Individuality may be secured through attractive trim colors.

Meat Losses Cut By Modern Cooling

Eureka, Calif.—Material reduction in meat losses by the installation of modern refrigeration equipment financed under the Federal Housing Administration's Modernization Credit Plan were effected here in the meat market of Miss Patricia Giannini, according to a letter which she submitted in a recent contest conducted by a San Francisco utilities company.

Miss Giannini, in her letter, explained that even when the monthly payments on the loan are taken into consideration her market today is saving a considerable sum each month in operating costs and is now in a position to offer the public merchandise of higher quality.

Shellac Stained Surface Before Applying Paint

Stained surfaces may be restained, varnished or shellacked without surface preparation other than cleaning. A stained surface to be painted or enameled is first given a coat or two of shellac or aluminum paint, to prevent possible "bleeding" through of the new light finish.

A Fine House and Over 2 Acres of Land.
About 6 blocks north of the city, adjoining extensive public school grounds, this handsome 10-room house with its 2 baths, 2 fireplaces, oil burner and spacious porches, is more than most of us can reasonably expect in this world. But there's more to it, a 4-car garage, a large swimming pool, a spring-fed stream and its own hillside for fruit and flowers or the Christmas sled. Then the house is in perfect condition, can be occupied at once. The price $14,500.00, is less than half what it was and the safety of the children is worth more than that. Mr. Hurd considers this the city's greatest offering. Ask him about it.

314 Penna. Ave. S.E.

A Virginia House of 1808.
Commander Dyer built this house. He had the taste of his times, the taste which did so much for Williamsburg, Alexandria and old Georgetown. He built well, put in heavy brick walls and hand-hewn timbers. He also liked to see a lot of country. His successors have modernized the house, given it plumbing, electricity, concrete cellar, etc.; also made some mistakes which you can rectify. There are 8 rooms, bath, large porch, some large shade trees at the house, fruit trees and the 4 acres of land are fertile as well. The neighborhood is going high-hat. By road it's about 9 miles to the Treasury. About a mile of the road is not so good, but is better than the commander ever expected. An emergency makes it possible to get this for $8,500.00. Terms cash above the $2,300.00 mortgage.

Thousands Now Tour India Annually in Place of Only 'Adventurous Few' of Recent Past

Motor Tour of Southland Prescribed for the Blues

Warm Climate and Sunny Hospitality Assured Lonely Northerner; Itinerary Worked Out to Touch Most Outstanding Places.

For a sure cure for winter blues, there's nothing like a few treatments of southern hospitality, with liberal doses of warm sunshine taken between meals of fried chicken, baked yams and hominy. And if you'd like to escape the cold, cold winds and the snow which makes winter miserable, why not take a hint from the birds and go South this winter?

Such a trip may be made easily by automobile, leaving Washington's chilly weather far behind, and enabling you to visit the most beautiful, charming and pleasant country in these United States. Even during the short space of two weeks, it is possible, without hurry, to see the Southland, to relax beneath a warm sun, and to forget the care and worries of your workaday world.

For example, drive south through the Shenandoah Valley, said to be the loveliest valley in America, to Roanoke, on to Winston-Salem and Charlotte, N. C., and Charleston, S. C. Charleston, a city whose very name bespeaks the traditions of southern hospitality, is one of the show places of America, and the visitor who has seen its broad lawns and white homes retains forever the charm of this southern city.

Call on Savannah.

Too, visit Savannah—and take a camera along to capture the quaintness and beauty of its waterfront. Savannah, from which the early Southern planters shipped their long-staple cotton, has always been an important port, and during the Civil War, scores of Confederate privateers made this city their headquarters in desperate efforts to break the blockade established by Union gunboats and frigates.

It was in this city that Sherman ended his famous march to the sea, cutting a swath through the heart of the Confederacy and hastening the defeat of the seceding States.

These Southern cities retain the memories, not only of that tragic struggle, but of the years which preceded it, the years when the Southern planter was famous throughout the entire world for his hospitality, his culture and his charm, when lovely crinoline ladies walked through stately gardens—the old South which was the inspiration for Stephen Foster's immortal songs.

Leaving this bit of the old South for a few days, the motorist finds an ideal motor highway extending to the land of flowers, Florida. Ponce de Leon, that old Spaniard who sought a fabled fountain of youth, discovered this land and named it Florida because of the flowers his men found there. And while de Leon failed to find his fountain of youth, Americans today are finding it an ideal land for youth, middle age and old age, too. Florida has long been a favorite wintering place and this year is more popular than ever.

One of Oldest Cities.

From Jacksonville, Fla., the highway continues south to St. Augustine, one of the oldest cities in North America. Skirting the sea, the road takes an almost straight line to Daytona Beach (try your car's speed on the famous hard-packed sand beach where Malcolm Campbell and his Bluebird racer traveled 300 miles an hour), and on to Palm Springs and Miami.

Spend several days in Maimi, Miami Beach and Coral Gables, and then visit Florida's famous western coast. Your road takes you through the proposed Everglades National Park to Fort Myers, Venice and Tampa. Tampa and St. Petersburg, "the Sunshine City," are among the loveliest cities in all the Southland.

Continuing northward, the route takes you through Tallahasse, Florida's capital, and across the Gulf plain to Pensacola, Mobile, Ala.; Biloxi and Gulfport, Miss., are next visited as you drive over the Old Spanish Trail, which parallels the Gulf coast, to New Orleans, America's only "old world" city. New Orleans, whose annual Madri Gras fete draws tens of thousands of visitors, will also be in the sports spotlight on New Year's Day when the Louisiana State University football team will meet an outstanding "Yankee" team in the annual "Sugar Bowl Tournament."

From New Orleans, investigate "Ol' Man River," the Mississippi. An excellent highway leads along this river to Memphis, the heart of the Old South. Two Mississippi cities, Natchez and Vicksburg, are also on the "must" list for Southern visitors. Old Natchez, the center of Mississippi's antebellum gayety, retains its traditions, and the Natchez-Under-the-Hill section is still reminiscent of the Roaring Forties when steamboat gamblers made it their headquarters.

The route back home will take you through Nashville, Knoxville, and Bristol, the latter city straddling the Tennessee-Virginia State line. Again visiting Roanoke, continue on to Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy—and then, it's only a few miles on to Washington—and it's winter again!

Buggy Favored Above the Auto At Hot Springs

National Park Regulations in Arkansas Strict Also About Fires

Horses and horse-drawn vehicles have the right-of-way at all times in Hot Springs (Ark.) National Park. If a horse wants the inside of the road, you give it to him. If you drive an automobile through the park, you will not speed because the roads are mountain roads, and, as park officials say, "there is no need for high speeds."

Hot Springs is the oldest of the national parks. It has been under Government control since 1832, when the area was withdrawn from settlement. The park lies between two ranges of the Ouchita Mountains. The town, which has grown up around the springs, is narrow—not more than 100 feet wide at some spots, and miles long, divided by Central avenue, which runs the length of the city and provides visitors with an impressive promenade. Its central location, within 48 hours by rail from every large city in the country east of the Sierras, contributes to its popularity. It is six hours by plane from Washington.

The park force is insistent upon maintaining the forested area as near to its natural state as possible. One may not pick the flowers, or cut down the trees. Nor can one build a fire in the forest.

Other, larger parks are not so closely supervised, and campers are allowed to go back into the hinterlands and live the life of Crusoe. But at Hot Springs is maintained a small Eden, where roughing it is not rough, and where walking need not necessitate a hike.

Lure of India Continues to Grow Upon Travelers

Only "Adventurous Few" Toured This Land Some Years Ago.

Railroads and Hotels Modernized Now to Serve Thousands.

Bombay.

Travelers to India are no longer in that small number that was once pointed out with awe and wonder as the "adventurous few." Today their numbers include thousands who have come to realize the attractions of the Indian Empire.

Because of this increase in the travel movement toward India, the railway service has improved enormously so that conditions under which passengers can move from one end of the continent to the other are comfortable and convenient. The hotels in India have also kept pace with this improvement.

It has been said that the spectacle of India is so vast that a lifetime spent in its scrutiny brings one only to the edge of the stage upon which its countless dramas are enacted. The idea behind successful travel in this vast land is to have one's itinerary skillfully planned in advance, so that an expert division of the hours can achieve wonders.

Appeal Remains Strong.

Throughout the ages India has had a romantic appeal to the traveler and today this appeal is as strong as ever. It is a changeless land in spite of its modern effects. Beneath the surface throbs the India of Alexander, of Tamerlane, of Baber and the magnificent mogul emperors. History has left its indelible imprint here and one encounters it vividly in the streets that overflow with a hundred races, with white, black, brown and all intermediate tints; with Hindus, Moslems, Buddhists, Parsees and the imperturbably cool white man of the tropics.

And in the monuments. temples and palaces, as well as the minds of her people, live on today India's magnificent rulers, her ferocious invaders, the innumerable victories, defeats, famines, religious and social upheavals that make up her stirring history.

This is a land seething with fascinating and interesting sights. In Bombay, an important, modern city which is India's natural gateway, the beautiful harbor is furnished with extensive docks equipped to handle a vast amount of shipping. Here in Bombay, adopted home of the Parsis, are the famous Towers of Silence, where the dead are exposed to the prey of birds.

Not far off is Japur, the "Pink City," a thoroughly Oriental place, where the houses are painted a delicate shade of pink, and everyone tries to surpass his neighbor in the brilliance of his attire. A night's journey beyond is Delhi, capital of India, eight times rebuilt under various rulers. The remains of many ancient buildings survive in Delhi, some retaining much of their original beauty. Incidentally, Delhi has bazaars to gladden the shopper's heart and to ease the seeking of his fingers with gorgeous rugs, fine muslins and brocades and the most delicate examples of silver and ivory work.

Outside the modern City of Delhi is Kutb Minar, old when the Mongols arrived, and still raising its unscarred slenderness into the cloudless Indian sky.

And now Agra, home of the infinitely lovely Taj Mahal, monument to undying love and creative genius. It has been called "that chaste gesture in marble," and will repay endless visits. The great sandstone fort in Agra, with its stern exterior, has the loveliest of palaces, the daintiest of marble pavilions and the famous Pearl Mosque. A short drive away is the deserted city of Fatehpur Sikri.

Calcutta Has Lure.

Those whom India's impenetrable mystery most baffles will cross the wide width of India, visiting Calcutta and the Jain Temple and the Black Hole of tragic memory.

North, then, across Bengal to Siliguri, in the foothills of the Himalayas. Upward by train 7,000 feet is Darjeeling, where one sees the stoic Tibetan monks and the spinning of prayer wheels. If you can make it, ride before dawn out to Tiger and be enthralled by the majesty of the sunrise over Mount Everest, highest mountain in the world.

South from Calcutta is Madras and the famous temples at Madura. One never finishes traveling in India. There is too much to see, too much to comprehend. But whether the visit is a week or a year, it yields something no other place in the world can give. And travelers do not forget.

Gay Metropolitan Spots Invite D. C. Week-Enders

New York Is Within Easy Reach and Offers Striking Theatrical Program This Season; Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston Also Listed.

By Roland Winter.

The National Capital, within easy week-end distance of the Nation's most colorful metropolitan centers, is fortunately situated for residents with a yen to taste of the bright night lights or mingle with the polyglot throngs that give city sight seeing an exciting flavor that can't be found anywhere else.

New York, of course, leads the list, and Baltimore, Philadelphia and even Boston are within range. With the theatrical season swinging into high gear and offering what the critics call the best menu since 1929, Broadway is a week-ender's mecca. And it is scarcely more than four hours from Pennsylvania avenue by crack trains.

It takes a little longer by auto, but even in the late fall the motor trip has its advantages and offers as much as you choose to take in the way of sights and side excursions en route.

But in either case the main stem is your objective, and it's gayer, gaudier, brighter and more exhilarating than ever this season with its kaleidoscope of lights and crowds—and there is still plenty of cacophony, despite Mayor LaGuardia's antinoise campaign.

Judging from Broadway reports sifting into these parts recently, some of the best prospects for entertainment—and good prospective talking points for winter evening tea tables after you get back—are "At Home Abroad," with Beatrice Lillie and Ethel Waters, a musical business; "Jumbo," in which Paul Whiteman and Jimmy Durante are livening up the old Hippodrome, and which plays on Sundays especially for the convenience of week-enders; and "Paradise Lost," a Clifford Odets leftwinger the Group Theater opens tomorrow night, sure to be sure thing for pink-tea-table talk.

Then there are several of last year's favorites, including the perennial "Tobacco Road" and the "Children's Hour" and "Three Men on a Horse."

Rubberneck Tours.

A point of eternal controversy is the rubberneck tour. Looked down upon by the sophisticate as the last word in hayseed, such a trip will let you in on more of interest about little old New York than you would learn in a year of ordinary residence there. But, if you have any reputation among the blase, take the ride under an assumed name and turn your coat collar well up and your hat well down and hope you don't see anyone you know.

A less ambitious jaunt, but one that's good for a good week-end's diversion, is the brief ride to Baltimore. There's usually a bit of theater going on over there, and the town boasts a really intriguing water front, with "joints" of a salty savor to suit any taste and sea food that's nationally famous.

In the way of solid sightseeing, there is Johns Hopkins University and its museum of arts and archeology. One of the most interesting items to be seen anywhere is the old shot tower, a massive brick shaft 230-odd feet high, whence a century ago they used to make cannon balls by dropping gobs of molten lead to the water below. The metal assumed an almost perfect spherical shape during the trip down.

Philadelphia Promising.

A little further up the line is Philadelphia, formerly widely and strongly recommended for a quiet week-end, but what with the lifting of the blue laws in the election last month and the opening of some widely heralded eating spots in the downtown area in recent years, the City of Brotherly Love and one-way streets is about to lose its staid reputation.

Boston, with its picturesque, Old World streets and its huge fishing fleets, is a little far for the ordinary week-end and perhaps a little chill for these coming months, but it is a cultural and social center, as they won't let you forget for a moment if you go there, that must be visited.

With Paul Revere House, Faneuil Hall and Bunker Hill just across the rvier, Boston will take second place to no city in historic attractions. What you are prone to overlook about Boston is that it is not a city purely of antique furniture emporiums and quaint tea shops, but is a tremendous industrial and urban center. With environs it's credited with being the fourth largest metropolitan area in the United States.

Country life has its much sung delights and rural resorts come first to mind when vacation plans are brewing, but a trip to the big city, and it doesn't have to cost much, offers a thrill that ought not to be overlooked in choosing the program.

Scilly Isles, Off Foot of England, Verdant Resort

Tropical Place Is Favorite Haven for Vacationers From Mainland.

Penzance, England—Tropical England is the name often given to that group of the British Isles where the Scillonians live, 30 miles beyond Land's End. The people resent being called "islanders" and do not like any reference to their abode as "rocks," for, bleak as the rocks appear from the passing transatlantic liners, they are gardens of luxuriant beauty, surpassing anything on the English mainland. Narcissi, jonquils, daffodils and lilies of every kind grow there in wide acres, which tropical palms provide shade.

The Scilly Isles are a favorite winter resort of the English, for flowers are picked from November through four months till Easter and shipped in tons to the mainland. It is nothing to gather 1,500,000 daffodils a day.

The people prefer to be called Scillonians because it is more distinctive and relates them definitely to their rough wrecker forefathers. The source of wealth in the old days was wrecks, not flowers, and the tales of the past contrast strangely with the flowerlands of today.

One Sunday long ago, while the church service was going on, there came a cry of "Wreck!" The men started from their seats and in a moment there would have been a rush to the door.

The clergyman, however, thundered a warning as he ran from the pulpit, throwing his gown aside, "Let's all start fair!" and the congregation followed at his heels, not arriving before the minister had secured first grab at the plunder.

Relics of Stormy Military Past Abound in Colorful San Antonio

San Antonio de Bexar, the Spanish outpost of three centuries ago, is one of the largest military headquarters of the United States. San Antonio's military history is full of dramatic incidents, of which relics remain to attract tourists, scholars of history, and artists in addition to the visitors who go there to visit their friends and relatives in Uncle Sam's Army.

Most Southwestern visitors sooner or later remember the Alamo and go there to see it as it stands today, dwarfed by neighboring skyscrapers, but still the tiny fort that is dear to Texans as the cradle of their liberty.

Probably no military siege in our history has had deeper effect upon the course of American history than the desperate stand of the Alamo's garrison of 182 men against Santa Ana's army in March, 1836, which did not end till all the men were dead.

The army crowd keeps life gay in San Antonio. They have brought polo, golf, tennis and other sports to the Texas resort. Guest ranches have been established in the surrounding country. Hunters tramp the country and fishermen follow the streams and visit the lakes.

San Antonio is a year-round resort, offering sports in winter and summer, and maintaining entertainment suitable to the season. It lies far enough South to escape severe winters, and the dry air makes summers more pleasant than that of most Southern inland resorts.

Thousands of Christmas Cruisers Prepare for a Holiday Far From Ice and Snow

War Whets Appetite for Travel Data

Maj. Darley Describes Experiences on Duty in Ethiopia.

British Officer Has Spent Seven Years With Natives There.

By Beth Moore.

War has always been the world's most effective geography lesson. Valiant explorers have sailed unknown seas and come safely into port in bays which later became famous harbors, but it has always taken the army to bring the facts of geography to the folks at home.

When America found herself unexpectedly possessed of an island empire at the turn of the century, when blimentallism gave way to imperialism as an election issue, the people clamored for information on the Philippines. The islands had been on the map for three or four centuries, but the only book anyone could find on the place was a natural history written some years before by a scholarly gentleman whose tastes ran to scientific style.

After the same gentleman had revised his book and any number of returning soldiers had added their bit, the islands began to take form in the public mind.

Strange Names in News.

Last year the headlines were again full of unheard of names. Adowa, Aduwah and other variations; Aksum, Ethiopia, Somaliland—readers rushed to encyclopedias, libraries, atlases and even to the old school geography, and learned little. But shortly books began to pour into publishing offices, and presently appeared on the stands. Now you can get any number of books on Ethiopia, and Haile Selassie's family is as well known to the man in the street as the family of his own Aunt Nellie out in Keokuk.

One of these books, "Slaves and Ivory in Abyssinia," by Maj. Henry Darley, reprint of a 1925 edition (McBride), gives a comparatively rare insight into the mysterious country. Many of the books now on the book shop shelves have been hastily put together by professional writers who used reference books rather than personal experience as a basis. Maj. Darley has, on the other hand, used personal experience almost entirely.

However, his book has one serious flaw. It was written before Haile Selassie came to Sheba's throne, and one wonders, without enlightenment, whether Maj. Darley still believes, as he did in 1925, that the government of that country must be changed. Moreover, Darley is an Englishman who held a frontier post at the time when friction between England's natives and Ethiopia's natives amounted almost to warfare. Since it was Darley's job to protect English subjects, he has naturally shown the Ethiopians to be rather less intelligent and rather more brutal than devils.

Statements Controversial.

At first thought one would almost say that the book should not have been reprinted. The thesis is too closely related to the basis of the war there, which declares for freedom from Haile Selassie on one side and freedom from foreign dominance on the other. It is doubtful that England would approve of many such statements as this one from men in her service. However, the book is essentially a story of exploits in the interior of the world's front page nation, and, as such, gives a good deal of first hand information which is apparently accurate.

The illustrations are not very good, though they do show a little of the scenery of the uplands, and the endpapers illustrate some of the curious customs. The book is worth reading, if you have plenty of time, and you will knd it entertaining—though perhaps not very well suited to reading late at night. It is a bit gruesome in spots, and many of the major's escapes are very narrow indeed.

The major's visit to Ethiopia lasted for seven years, and dates back to 1907. Called back to England at the beginning of the World War, he was later returned to the frontier as British agent. If you can remember that American soldiers were still sitting on the lid in the Philippines when he went there, and that Mexico has had a series of revolutions since then, you will perhaps not be too shocked by the undemocratic methods of government. And with this one grain of salt, you will find the book enlightening and easy reading.

All-American Air Maneuvers Attract 600 Fliers to Florida

Miami Prepared to Accommodate 15,000 Spectators at Aviation Spectacle This Week, With Service Men Participating.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 7.—With northern airports frozen and snowswept, the Nation's sportsmen pilots will soon turn their wings to the Southland for summer flying weather under winter skies.

Foremost among Florida aviation activities this season are the eighth annual All-American Air Maneuvers starting Thursday in which 600 to 800 military and civilian planes are expected to participate.

Seating accomodations for 15,000 spectators, including a host of winter visitors and scores of distinguished guests, have been provided at the municipal airport.

Prior to the meet 200 ships of the General Headquarters Army Air Force from Langley Field, will engage in midwinter maneuvers over the State, converging at Miami in time for the activities.

Civilian racing pilots will compete for more than $5,000 in cash prizes and many trophies. In addition to these, special cash awards have been set aside for fliers who set new world's records in the speed events. The National Aeronautic Association has sanctioned the races.

Thrills for the spectators will be provided by Lieut. Al Williams, noted acrobatic flier who originated the "outside loop;" the "Three Men on the Flying Trapeze," daredevil Army Corps team, and a 10,000-foot delayed bat-wing descent by Clem Sohn, parachute jumper.

Gatherings of a number of a famous aviation organizations are scheduled during the three-day program. These include reunions of the Early Birds and Quiet Birdmen and meetings of the Society of Automotive Engineers and National Aviation editors.

Canadians Expect Busy Sports Season

Quebec, Dec. 7.—Plans already matured indicate a record season of winter sports activity throughout Canada. In addition to the established features like the Quebec dogsled derby, the Seigniory Club events, the Banff winter carnival and the Revelstoke ski tournament, the coming winter shows an unusual interest in amateur skiing, both in the nearby Laurentian Mountains and in the Canadian Rockies. Every week-end the Canadian Pacific is running special ski trains from Montreal up to Ste. Agathe, whence the downhill skier can descend 20 miles of Laurentian slopes back to Shawbridge, where he boards the waiting train for home. In the Banff-Lake Louise area during February, March and April the ski runners of the Canadian Rockies are celebrating their fourth season by intensive exploration of this vast ski terrain.

Native of India Next Lecturer Of Post Series

Nalin S. Sen, M. A., Will Speak of "Enchanting India" on Tuesday.

India, the spice lands which Columbus was seeking when he stumbled upon a new and unknown continent, and which has fired the imagination of travelers for centuries, will be described by Nalin S. Sen, traveler, lecturer and author, Tuesday evening in the eighth Washington Post travel lecture, "Enchanting India." This lecture will be delivered at the Masonic auditorium, Thirteenth and New York avenue, at 8:15 p. m.

Nalin S. Sen, M. A., is a native of India, and the material for his lecture is the result of personal experiences. He not only tells of the amazing history of India, a history which is older than the memory of mankind, but also pictures the daily life of its 300,000,000 inhabitants, the Brahmins, the Hindus, the "untouchables," and the holy men who wield such power.

He takes his listeners into the very heart of this hallowed and historic country, initiating his audience into the mystic enchantment of the Far East. With him they visit the Illora and Ajanta cave temples of the pre-Christian era, eight cities, Mohammedan monuments, the temples of Madura, southern India, Ceylon, Agra and a host of other interesting places. He also describes Indian customs, including a wedding.

India to many is symbolized by the beautiful Taj Mahal near Agra. Mr. Sen tells the immortal love story that led to the building of this "poem in stone." The lecture is illustrated with colored slides.

Mr. Sen's lecture is the last to be given before the Christmas holidays. Beginning January 7, 12 lectures, on Italy, Bermuda, Czechoslovakia, Mexico, France, Japan, England, Norway, Denmark, Germany, Guatemala, and Sweden, are scheduled. Literature, describing these lectures, will be available at The Washington Post, E street near Fourteenth, on December 20.

Tickets for "Enchanting India" may be purchased either at The Post or at the Auditorium box office on the evening of the lecture. The doors will be opened at 7 p. m.

Christmas Cruise.

The Merchants & Miners Line will operate a personally conducted tour Baltimore to Miami and Havana, sailing on the S. S. Berkshire, December 20, visiting Daytona Beach, West Palm Beach, with Christmas Eve dinner at the Hotel Everglades, Miami—sailing same night for Havana to spend Christmas Day in Havana, enjoying the festivities of an Old World City.

Post Lecturer

Siam Alluring.

Seattle.—The golden spires of Bangkok, the sacred elephants and the story-book places of Siam are commencing to exercise a potent lure for the insatiable traveler who is ever demanding something new. According to L. J. Lancaster, general passenger agent of the American Mail Line here, the preponderance of inquiries at the present time concerning Oriental travel has to do with such countries as Siam and Indo-China.

Auto Convention Packs Big Atlantic City Hall

Atlantic City, Dec. 7.—To the 15,000,000 visitors' total, estimated to have come to this resort in 1935, will be added another 30,000 this week as the Automotive Service Industries Show holds its convention and exposition in Atlantic City's huge Convention Hall. Since its inception in 1919, the A. S. I. S. is this year breaking all previous records in size and attendance. Every inch of the 168,000 square feet of the Convention Hall's main floor is being utilized, while demand for space is still so great that the exhibitors, unable to secure space on this floor, are being accommodated on the garage level and even on the plaza in front of the building.

Southern Pines.

Southern Pines, N. C., Dec. 7.—The holiday round of socials will open Monday with Mr. and Mrs. Emmett E. Boone, of Westhampton Beach, Long Island, entertaining the Silver Foils at a tea and putting contest at the Pine Needles Inn. Another event of interest to members of the younger set is a dance to be given at Southern Pines Country Club Friday evening. Tuesday a women's golf tournament will be played at the Country Club. Mrs. Emmett French, of Youngstown, Ohio, will be in charge.

Floridian Optimistic.

Miami, Fla.—The Floridian, famous winter resort here, inaugurated its 1935-1936 season last week, according to an announcement by Frank Seiden, owner and operator of the hotel.

Mexico Corrects Rules for Motoring Visitor

Tourist travel over the national highway into Mexico is greatly facilitated by a recent action of the Mexican government doing away with the necessity of the motorist's posting bond for his car upon entering the republic and requiring, instead the payment of three pesos, which is less than one dollar in United States money, reports the Touring Bureau of the Keystone Automobile Club.

Suitable regulations are provided in the new law to safeguard the bootlegging of cars into Mexico, while at the same time giving the tourist the advantage of ready entry into the country, it is stated.

Road Work Progressing Along Valaisan Valley

Road construction in the Valaisan side valleys in Switzerland is making rapid progress. The highway from Stalden to Saas-Fee has been finished as far as Huteggen for some time and work is now being pushed on to Saas-Fee. A highway is also being built from Stalden along the River Visp to Zermatt. At this time the road is open to traffic to about three kilometers north of St. Niklaus, where a parking space is provided. By next summer the stretch to St. Niklaus is to be completed.

Former Grid Star Due To Conduct Tour Party

Football fans will remember Richard E. (Dick) Gentle as the captain of the University of Pennsylvania football team in 1930. Dick Gentle is now connected with Ober Steamship & Tourist Agency and it is reported he will conduct a vacation praty to Bermuda, using the new U. S. line S. S. Manhattan. The party is leaving Washington December 27, sailing that night from New York and returning to New York on January 1. One of the features of the trip will be the gala New Year's Eve Celebration at sea.

Three escorted winter tours to California, including a holiday trip in December and two others scheduled out of Chicago in January and February—will be offered by the Chicago & North Western-Union Pacific this year, John C. Pollock, manager of the department of tours, announces.

Based on the lowest fares ever established to California, these winter tours will offer a choice of coach, tourist car and standard Pullman car accommodations en route at varying prices.

Liner Queen Mary To Be 'Art Exhibit'

Younger School in Britain Dominate in Decorations.

The younger school of British artists predominates in the design and decoration of the interior of the new Cunard White Star superliner, Queen Mary, which will arrive in New York for the first time on June 1 next. The passenger accommodations of the big ship will be modern, but modern with the restraint that arises from a wholesome respect for tradition and the successful accomplishments of the past.

To many Americans, the Queen Mary will be a revelation, a huge traveling exhibit of the progress in modern art in Great Britain since the Great War. It is safe to say that reputations will be made for the British artists represented in this ship when the public on this side has had a chance to see their work. While the ship does not by any means contain the work of all British artists of today, it is quite comprehensive in its scope and fairly represents the different tendencies of the British School.

Three Special Cruises Scheduled for Holiday

Three special cruises are being offered the holiday travelers by the Waters Ideal Tours. Leaving New York at midnight, December 27, the passengers will celebrate New Year's Eve aboard the dock early in the morning, January 2. Ships sailing include: Manhattan to Bermuda, Majestic to Nassau, and the Bremen which touches both Bermuda and Nassau.

Reservations are 200 per cent greater this year than for the holiday cruises last season, according to the office, and other travel has increased correspondingly.

Canal Ships to Call At Acapulco, Mexico

Panama Pacific Line Alters Schedule for January.

Announcement has been made by the Panama Pacific Line that during January two of its liners in the coast-to-coast service via Panama will call eastbound at Acapulco, the Mexican seaport nearest to Mexico City.

Parties from the east are being organized for these calls. These will go by rail to Mexico City for several days of sightseeing before motoring to the seaport to board the liner.

A night will be spent at Cuernavaca. Diplomats and soldiers have lovely homes there. The late Dwight Morrow lived there when he was American Ambassador to Mexico.

Cape Town Prized.

Cape Town is one of the most beautifully situated cities in the world in regard to scenery, climate, verdure, woods or water. Table Mountain, upon which Cape Town rests its shoulders while its feet dangle in Table Bay, throws its ever-changing shadows over this city of trees, flowers, oak groves and pine woods. Orchids grow wild all the way from the outskirts of Cape Town to the top of Table Mountain.

"Florida resorts will be able to look forward to the biggest season in many years, based upon a report just completed by the Seaboard Air Line Railway," said Edward Plack, assistant general passenger agent, here. "The season is beginning earlier than ever before and December trains are already well patronized by passengers who are determined to keep out of the way of winter's woes."

Annual Banquet For Boys' Band Given by Elks

Judge Mattingly, C. E. Ford Speakers; Fred Whitehead Presides.

The annual banquet for the Boys Band of Washington Lodge of Elks was held at the club last Tuesday. Judge Robert E. Mattingly and Attorney Charles E. Ford were the speakers. Secretary William S. Shelby delivered a humorous recitation. Fred N. Whitehead, octogenarian booster of the band, presided.

Judge Mattingly praised the Elks for their sponsorship of the band. The band, he declared, was providing a practical education in music for a large number of boys who might be unable otherwise to obtain it, and was on a par with boys' clubs in tending to reduce juvenile delinquency. Mr. Ford congratulated the boys on their splendid showing during the past year, when they won trophies in numerous competitions. Harvey Belt, chairman of the board of governors, responded on behalf of the band.

More than 200 Elks who have been members of the order 25 years and longer will be feted by the lodge Wednesday, when the annual Old-Timers' Night will be held. The rathskeller of the club will be converted into a combination banquet hall and playroom, where the aging Elks will be entertained and subjected to the pranks of the younger generation. William Hettinger is chairman of the committee on arrangements.

Following group meetings Friday afternoon, at which the students will consider various phases of the question, they will meet in general session Saturday morning for discussion and to adopt resolutions expressing the view of the majority.

Delegates to the conference will be guests of the University at the Cue and Curtain Club performance Friday night, and on Saturday will be entertained at luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel. At the closing session Saturday afternoon they will hear Dr. Owen R. Lovejoy, eminent sociologist and former president of the National Conference of Social Work, who will speak on "The Work of the American Youth Commission."

Georgetown University to Hold Celebration Of 2,000th Anniversary of Birth of Poet Horace

The Rev. John E. Grattan in Charge of the Program in Gaston Hall.

A celebration of the Horatian bimillennium (2,000th anniversary of birth of the Latin Poet, Horace) will be conducted tonight in Gaston Hall, Georgetown University.

The Rev. John E. Grattan, S. J., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, has arranged the program, an annual affair at Georgetown. It is being elaborated upon this year, however.

Five selected students will take part in the program at 8:15 tonight. Each student will stand an oral examination on odes, epodes and satires, conducted by visiting professors from other universities.

Similar programs have been customary at Georgetown and other Jesuit universities for many years and have always been popular with audiences familiar with the classics and interested in hearing the translations and discussions of collateral matter concerning the mythology, literary criticism and general background. Several years ago on the occasion of the bimillennium of Virgil, a similar exposition of his works was given at Georgetown.

The students who will take part in the Horace actus are George A. Dies, jr., William J. Corboy, jr., Blair M. Bennett, Francis A. Finnegan and John L. Keenan, jr., who are specializing in the classics. Georgetown's collection of ancient editions of Horace's works, including several published in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, will be on exhibition for the benefit of visitors in the Carroll Parlours before and after the program.

Hamilton Medal Debate Set for December 16; Sides Are Chosen.

Debating Society, of which the Rev. John J. Toohey, S. J., is the moderator. Next to the Merrick debate, the forthcoming contest is one of the most important scholastic events of the college year. George E. Hamilton, dean of the law school, and a member of the Philodemic Society when he was a student at the college more than 60 years ago, established the medal award in 1910.

Father Toohey announced that the debate would be on the question of the empowering Congress, by a two-thirds vote, to override a decision of the Supreme Court declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional. The question is one which is being given almost universal attention by college debaters this year.

The affirmative side of the question will be upheld by Peter J. Brennan, jr., of Illinois; Joseph J. Power, of Massachusetts, and Milton A. Free, of New York. Opposed to them will be John S. Lang, of New Jersey; James D. Curtin, of New York, and Thomas B. Finan, jr., of Maryland. The decision will be rendered by a board of judges who have not yet been selected.

At the meeting the girls drew up a tentative schedule of activities.

The chief work of the group will be to encourage students along artistic lines and to advise them of new, important and worth-while exhibits in Washington.

All kinds of weird antics, possibly enhanced by the college students' traditional restlessness on the eve of a Christmas vacation, may be expected. High lights of the program are Maj. Kelly's Amateur Night, a modern version of Wagner's "Tannhauser," a water carnival, and a scavenger hunt.

All arrangements for the three-day Old Home Week are in charge of Miss Annette Hayden. She will be assisted by Misses Alice Teahan, Jean Geherin and Virginia Dunnell.

398 Government Officials Were Heard Over N. B. C. Nets First 10 Months of Year

President Leads in Number Of Air Talks; Wallace Next

Representatives Outnumber Senators 96 to 50 in Air Appearances; Senator Nye Leads With 9 Broadcasts; Garner in Unique Position.

President Roosevelt and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace were the leading speakers among high Government officials heard during the first ten months of 1935 on the radio, records of the National Broadcasting Co. show.

Three hundred and ninety-eight Government officials have spoken over N. B. C. networks in the last ten months. President Roosevelt was heard over N. B. C. networks 15 times, making a total of 56 microphone appearances since he took the oath of office three years ago. Secretary Wallace spoke 16 times during the year, bringing his total number of microphone appearances since the start of the Administration to 48.

Each member of the President's Cabinet spoke at least once this past year, and as a whole made 65 broadcasts.

One hundred and forty-six members of Congress have spoken over the N. B. C. networks since last January; 50 Senators spoke 111 times, and 96 Representatives spoke 177.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, was the most prolific speaker of the Senate with nine broadcasts, and Representative Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, held the record for the House of Representatives with 11.

John N. Garner, Vice President of the United States, still occupies a unique position among Government officials. Since taking office he has been heard on the network only once, this on March 4 when he was inaugurated.

Kern Selects Numbers For "Album" Program

Jerome Kern has selected 16 of his song successes to be played and sung on the "American Album of Familiar Music" tonight at 9:30, WRC.

Kern was requested to make his choices by his old friend, Gus Haenschen, who directs the music for the broadcast and who orchestrated the score for Kern's "Sweet Adeline."

Songs from seven of Kern's musical show successes will be featured on the program. Frank Munn will sing "'Twas Not So Long Ago," "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" and "I Dream Too Much." Miss Monroe will feature "Why Was I Born?" and "I Am The Echo," from Kern's latest success, "I Dream Too Much." Additional Kern selections will be given by the Amsterdam Choir, Arden and Arden and the orchestra.

Avocations

Many Air Stars in Business "On the Side."

Kate Smith's recent acquisition of the original Celtics' basketball team brings to mind a number of other performers who have outside businesses remote from broadcasting.

Abe Lyman is the operator of a chain of lunch wagons on the Pacific Coast . . . Morton Downey is part owner of a glass factory in Brooklyn . . . Carmen Lombardo has a seat on the wheat exchange . . . Gabriel Heatter derives a nice profit from his Connecticut farms . . . Emery Deutsch is producing an automatic automobile top of his own design . . . Frank Crumit sells bonds as well as songs . . . Announcer Howard Claney finds a ready market for his oil paintings.

Harry Reser, Eskimos Return to Air Dec. 21

Just ten years ago in December, 1925, Harry Reser and his orchestra, the Eskimos, began a series of broadcasts that made his name a national byword. The series lasted for 7½ consecutive years.

Now, after a lapse of 2½ years, Harry Reser and his Eskimos return to the airwaves. The new series, beginning December 21, will go on the air for a half hour at 8 p. m. Saturdays over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

For those "old-timers" who used to enjoy Reser's music as it came through the old regenerative, or neutrodyne circuit, there will be enough of the unusual Reser arrangements to bring back sentimental yearnings for the old gooseneck loudspeaker days. As a concession to the new generation of listeners, there will be an unusual innovation in an electric organ used in combination with Reser's dance music. Also vocals by Lynne Gordon and Ernie Weber. Reser will again present his famous banjo specialties.

Paris Uncle Hears Baruch.

Andre Baruch, C. B. S. announcer, who hails from Paris, discovered a long-lost relative when he was heard in the land of his birth on Thanksgiving Eve, announcing the first of a series of exchange news broadcasts with France. Next morning he received a cable from an uncle whom he had not seen for 12 years. "We heard you over the air for the first time," it read. "Congratulations for George Washington's birthday. Uncle Arnold."

Star Prefers White.

Marlene Dietrich, costarring with Gary Cooper in Paramount's "The Pearl Necklace," has 30 pairs of white slacks and more than 27 white blouses in her personal wardrobe.

Actor Is Fat, So Croy Changes Script to Fit

The fictional characters of radio drama are sometimes considerably shaped by the actors who play their parts. For instance, Homer Croy, author and humorist, who writes "The Melody Master" scripts (WRC, Sundays), has entirely changed his original conception of one of the leading characters, Jess Huggins, because of Jack Smart, radio actor who vies with the now considerably reduced maestro, Jacques Renard, for the honor of being radio's most corpulent personality.

"My favorite character," Croy comments, "is that fine, boastful, money-talking stuffed shirt, Jess Huggins, the real estate man. I first visioned him as a thin man. Then Jack Smart was cast in his part, and Jack is fat (no other word will do), so I changed him over to a fat man, and it fits him perfectly."

Comments on the girth of Jess now enliven the repartee of the members of the Willow Heights home orchestra.

Price Joins "Gypsies."

Howard Price, 26-year-old tenor from Pittsburgh, who for the past two weeks has been heard as guest soloist with the "Gypsies," has been engaged to appear regularly on this program every Monday evening at 9, from WRC. The singer made such an impression on these two appearances, both on the audience and those concerned with the production of the program, that he has been signed for an indefinite engagement. Since he came to New York a year ago, Price has appeared as a singer in the stage musical, "Revenge With Music."

Under that hat and behind the forelock is Ted Kimball, NBC announcer, going into character for the regular weekly "Uncle Zip" program. (Fridays, 7:45, WRC.)

"Timekeeper" Sets Goal of 10,000 Dolls in Xmas Drive

This is about dolls. Big dolls, little dolls, rag dolls, china dolls. And old or new dolls. "Your Timekeeper," WRC's breakfast hour announcer, is after them, determined to see to it that any little girl who wants a doll for Chrsitmas gets it.

In fact, Gordon Hittenmark's thought boils down to a happy Christmas for every doll-loving youngster in town. That's what he had in mind when he celebrated his 200th program three weeks ago—and dedicated the entire two hours to a campaign for dolls—gifts from the listening audience to be passed along to the District's needy children.

Last year at an Iowa station Hittenmark collected more than 2,000 dolls and turned them over to an organization that saw to it that the needy girls got them on Christmas morning. This year he is after 10,000, and will give them to the Playgrounds Department of the District for distribution.

For the last three weeks he has been receiving the dolls at the studio, but now the Loew theaters are receiving points, as well as outlying Western Union substations. About 100 taxi drivers have signified their willingness to collect dolls for him from those who are unable to get to one of the receiving points.

Just across the court from Hittenmark's office in the Press Building is the Munsey Building, and at various times he has held up the dolls for girls in an office on the top floor to see. He does not know who they are or what office they work in, but after a time a huge box arrived—with two dozen dolls and a note explaining their sympathetic appreciation of the doll campaign.

High Frequencies

IT'S the simple words and not the difficult ones of many syllables that are most likely to trip up embryo announcers, Ray Perkins has found in interviewing aspirants for the announcer's post on the "National Amateur Night" program. During the five weeks he has been at it, Ray has made quite an exhaustive study of this word business. He has found that three words, "family," "children" and "why" are likely to prove the most troublesome.

Inability to pronounce the letter "L" failed to prevent Betty Winkler, "Grand Hotel" star, from becoming an actor in stock companies, and later, a radio star.

Discussing certain artists the other day, the Radio City crowd soon centered their talk on one in particular who once thought he was too big for the kilocycles. "Yes," drawled Bob Burns, "he was a great guy from star to finish."

While on a recent jaunt to Florida between broadcasts, Phil Baker went fishing with friends and caught a big sand shark. Admiring the huge, powerful fins, Phil observed: "What an act it would be for Fred Allen's amateur hour if that fish could play an accordion!"

Niesen to Follies.

Gertrude Niesen, exotic song personality of the Columbia network, is busy dividing her time between stage and radio. Miss Niesen's newest appearance before the footlights will be as a featured lead in the new Ziegfeld Follies, which goes into rehearsal this week preparatory to opening in Boston on or about Christmas Eve. Several of the sketches are being produced around the Columbia radio star.

Kaltenborn Sprints.

For the second time in 15 years of regular broadcasting, H. V. Kaltenborn was late in arriving at the C. B. S. studios one day last week. The first time was ten years ago when he was in a train wreck. This time it was a prosaic traffic jam on the motorcar ramp around the Grand Central Station. He hopped out of his car, sprinted eight blocks and was on the air just 5 minutes and 40 seconds after he was scheduled to begin. On three other occasions when he was forced down by adverse flying weather, he managed to arrange pick-ups from the cities where he landed.

With the Hams

All is quiet on the "sweepstake" front. After one week of CQ SS on all bands, this finally ended at 4 a. m., December 1, but we still heard Ed Roller, W3OZ, the following evening calling CQ SS. Maybe it was the rebound or echo of the day before.

The following letter was received from Paul Thomsen, W3LA:

"While attending the recent hamfest in Washington, D. C., we were informed by Lieut. Jett, acting chief engineer of the F. C. C., that the commission would be willing to listen to the wishes of amateur radio operators, provided, of course, that we presented suggestions which would improve radio conditions in general.

"Knowing this, I at once became interested in learning just how we, as a body, could ever hope to present our views when we exist as duly authorized individuals, interested in radio technique from strictly a personal point of view and, furthermore, without pecuniary interest.

"Surely we cannot as a body ever hope to express our wishes to the commission in one letter as effectively as if each and every one of us requested certain changes in the rules and regulations as set up by the commission. Knowing these facts, we are at the mercy of a few and this is not the spirit of true Americanism. Therefore I wish to suggest that the larger group representatives request a means by which the commission may find out our wishes other than through group demands.

"I wish to make a suggestion in this connection. In part the suggestion requests that the Federal Communication Commission demand each and every amateur operator, when making application for station and operator's renewal to fill out a group of representative questions pertaining to his amateur radio activities and needs. In this manner the commission can compile statistics which will be absolutely unbiased.

"The questions can so be arranged as to inform the commission of the individual applicant's activities and furthermore to definitely and accurately determine the problems most outstanding during the past three years of that amateur's activity. Again these questions need only be checked off or answered by an applicant for renewal of his license."

James Sutherland, W3CJT, put his portable 5-meter rig in his car the other evening, anticipating a bit of mobile DX. He drove up to Logan Circle, parked his car and unlimbered his signal squirter. After a lengthy CQ and a whirl at the dial, in came an R9 signal from Clinton Craft, W3EBX. After an exchange of reports and weather conditions and request for QRA it developed that W3EBX was also operating mobile and parked one car length ahead of W3CJT! Some DX, hi!

If the fellow on 56 megacycles, who insists on playing the fiddle for modulation test purposes would take a few lessons it would be greatly appreciated by the rest of the 56 megacycle boys.

"Bruce" Marshall, W3BKW, is off the air again or shall we say yet? C. R. Brinton, W3FXE, a newcomer, will be on the air very shortly with a couple of 801s. Jack Barthkowski, W3EVC, had a very pleasant QSO with the XYL on 56 megacycles. Said QSO taking place between the living room and kitchen!

U. S. "Stunts" on Air Liked by Europeans

Europe likes the American style of broadcasting, particularly that of the "stunt" order, and listens in wherever possible.

This is the information brought over by Max Jordan, continental representative of N. B. C. stationed at Basil, Switzerland, and now in the United States on his annual visit. To quote him:

"Europe's tastes in radio do not differ materially from American, but European broadcasters are far behind the American networks in seeking out the hard-to-get programs even in their own country. And this pioneering is making Americans almost better acquainted with the wonders of the Old World than Europeans themselves.

"Foreign broadcasters always are glad to pick up special N. B. C. broadcasts originating overseas, such as those from Mount Vesuvius, St. Bernard's hospice in the Swiss Alps and Addis Ababa. European broadcasters had considered such programs either impossible or too difficult."

As an example of the obstacles that must be overcome, Jordan referred to the first transmission from Addis Ababa. No one in Europe seemed to have much information about broadcast facilities there. It required two months to complete the arrangements after such a pick-up was first proposed.

Real Spirit of Christmas Marks Clubs' Programs

Organizations Prepare to Extend Their Hospitality to Women Visitors to Washington Who Might Otherwise Spend Lonesome Holiday.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

At this season of the year there is a real atmosphere of hospitality about the headquarters of the women's organizations in Washington. There are many women visitors from other cities and countries at this time. These women are welcomed by the Washington women members of organizations and invited to enjoy the privileges of the clubhouses and headquarters.

The real spirit of Christmas is evident in the plans of many Washington women's organizations. Not only are they joining in the projects to make a Merry Christmas for the children and poor of the District of Columbia but they also are arranging to entertain the women who have no homes in Washington or would otherwise eat Christmas dinner alone.

Thanksgiving Successful.

The Thanksgiving programs of the clubs and organizations were very successful especially the dances for the younger members. Christmas teas and dances and New Year's parties will be held at practically every club headquarters.

The growing interest the women of Washington are taking in the development of fine arts projects is demonstrated by the hearty support afforded the effort of the fine arts department of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs of which Mrs. Samuel A. Swiggett is chairman and Mrs. Ruby Smith Stahl is vice chairman. A particular note of interest in fine arts is seen in the support given the plans of Mrs. Frances W. Wheeler, recently appointed chairman of the division of art. Mrs. Wheeler is well known in the Washington artist colony and has won a reputation as an artist.

One of the most important activities of the art division is the sponsorship of the penny art fund. Each member of the District of Columbia Federation contributes one penny a year to this fund making $50 collected from the 5,000 members. This fund is always more however, as some of the members give more than a penny.

The money is used to purchase a picture to be placed in some public place designated by the club making the highest average in support of the fund. Mrs. Wheeler pointed out recently that the national contribution of the women of the general federation to art each year amounts to more than $30,000 from the 3,000,000 women contributing to the penny art fund. The fund is expended for American art in every community.

Tour Series Arranged.

Mrs. Wheeler has arranged for a series of tours by members of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs through the art galleries of Washington. The first one will take place Tuesday at the Phillips Memorial Gallery. C. Law Watkins will give a lecture on the art trends related to the gallery collections.

The District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs will participate in the plans for the second Greater Washington Independent Art Exhibit to be held in Washington later in the season. The women will also sponsor a State contest of professional artists of the District of Columbia in April.

The current exhibition of paintings of Mrs. Susan B. Chase, at Friendship House, was arranged by Mrs. Wheeler. Another exhibition sponsored by Mrs. Wheeler's division is the water color exhibition of Mrs. Frances Combs, A. H. O. Rolle, Miss Leslie Jackson, Miss Eleanor Parke Custis and Miss Gertrude Brown at the Northeastern Branch of the Public Library.

The Playhouse Flourishes as the Merry Yuletide Season Draws on Apace

a youthful singing comedienne who is especially popular in Washington, as she appears in her Mae West number in the twelfth edition of George White's "Scandals," opening in the National Theater tomorrow night. In a realignment of principals following the recent Richmond premiere of the revue, Gracie inherited most of the Lyda Roberti songs, of which this is one.

Authorship, One Observes, Has Something to Do With Values!

Dostoievski Is More Responsible for Success of "Crime and Punishment" Than All the Fine Actors in Cast—The "Good Old Days."

THERE has been a vast amount of argument, pro and con, concerning the worth of Russia's contribution to the cinema.

Certain partisans, with a slight leaning toward the left, have discerned a lively source of enthusiasm in the Soviet's celluloid depictions of the problems of a new experiment in social structure.

Others have regretted the intrusion of fantastic conceptions into the orderly scheme of the theater's development.

Back of all this purely modernistic controversy over a subject that warrants only a fraction of the attention it has attracted, is the fact that, basically, Russian literature and drama contain the fundamentals of a theater of robust and enduring stature.

It is far more to the profundity of Dostoievski and the universality of his appeal that "Crime and Punishment" is indebted for its poignant grip than to any surface proficiency of even such accomplished masters of their art as Peter Lorre and Edward Arnold.

Arnold and Lorre, to be sure, enact their roles with consummate skill, but underlying the glossy surface of their histrionic polish—and Lorre's disturbing gift seems done scant praise by the word "polish"—is the inescapable fact that the author has afforded them unusual outlets for the superiority of their interpretative gifts.

The role of Kaskolnikov, impersonated by Lorre, is the epitome of futility in individual revolt against the established social state. He is the transgressor, hunted, haunted and hounded by the respective powers of the law, the urges of his own conscience and the love of a beautiful, but erring, girl.

He is the one actor in the sphere of the gelatins perfectly equipped for the complete realization of the author's intent in the limning of the character.

But, even so, his physical, mental and spiritual equipment for the superlative chore which he performs in the name of a faithful and intelligent art would be nullified if Dostoievski had not charted a course in which any actor must perforce be infallible.

Lorre is great. His role is greater. And this must be extended to include the police inspector of Edward Arnold.

* * * *

THERE is, then, a distinctive faculty on the part of Russian writers to imbue their characters with a quality of tragic reality that authors of other nationalities seem unable to apprehend.

Tolstoi attained a degree of realistic authenticity in his novel of "Anna Karenina" that even the prodigious facilities of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the sublime abilities of Greta Garbo seemed unable to encompass to the full measure of their potentialities.

The same largely was true of "We Live Again," another treatise upon the futile grandeur of Czaristic Russia.

If the history of the Russian motif in the American cinema were to be traced from its source to its final cinematic expression, it would be found, I dare say, that Russian authorship always has outstripped the interpretative powers of alien actors.

Certainly this is so in "Crime and Punishment." There is here a deep-rooted note of tragedy and pathos that no actorial incompetence could quench.

The play, by the intrinsic worth of its examination of the lives of common and universally understood people, is something that ranges beyond the ordinary run of stock "movie" stories.

It is an epic, in its way, dedicated to the struggles of a universal humanity.

The supreme appeal of the film is less a matter of Mr. Arnold and Herr Lorre than it is of the profoundly moving understanding of his fellow men on the part of Dostoievski.

Writers, it seems, will find it advantageous now and again to get down to earth.

There is none of Park avenue in "Crime and Punishment." There is a great deal of the anguish of human souls.

as they appear in Columbia's picturization of Dostoievski's penetrating novel of "Crime and Punishment," currently on view at the Warner Brothers Metropolitan Theater. George White Is the Human Dynamo Of the Theater and Slave of Golf

Once Messenger and Hoofer, Producer Never Has Had Box-Office Failure.

By Nat N. Dorfman.

THERE is nothing passive about George White, genius of the American show shops.

Keenly alert to the moods of playgoers, he is in a constant state of inspiration. He is hardly through with one enterprise when he begins work on another. And yet there are those who call his meteoric rise to success just a case of luck.

Fourteen Broadway shows in a row—and not one that knew the grief of box-office failure!

This is Producer White's record. And now comes his fifteenth, a new stage "Scandals," which, prior to the Broadway premiere, begins a week's engagement at the National Theater tomorrow evening.

Until the pernicious influence of golf had eaten its way into the sturdy fiber of his single-mindedness, White spent all his waking hours in the pursuit of bigger and better dance routines, prima donnas, song hits, comedy sketches, chorus girls, living curtains, blackouts and all the other gewgaws that go to make up a successful musical production.

Visiting lowly cabarets and neighborhood vaudeville and picture houses in search of promising entertainers, training the dancers of forthcoming productions, rehearsing the players in the current hit, lest the show lose its early punch, and selling tickets at the box office of his own theater, he carried himself through feverish days and work-burdened nights with the vitality of a showman who loves the stage.

THAT enthusiasm was already evident when, as a boy, he delivered telegrams for Western Union, loitering with messages to Garcia to dance for coins in the saloons whenever the waiters were too busy with customers to take matters into their own thick hands. Many a pair of swinging doors opened for a dramatic flying exit of the agile messenger boy, two steps ahead of the bartender's broom.

From Bowery saloons to Ziegfeld's roof is a long jump for an entertainer, but George White made it in a few whirling years. Dancing at Hammerstein's with Benny Ryan, entertaining at the Winter Garden while the runway girls were resting between numbers, turkey trotting across the country in vaudeville, he limbered up for the hard routine that awaited him.

While supporting Raymond Hitchcock in "The Red Widow," he took a fancy to the smallest girl in the chorus, a youngster whose dimpled knees were one day to become a national institution.

When the time came to produce his first show, George White featured this lithe lady, Ann Pennington.

In 1919, with the last echoes of the war still thundering down the highways of the land, George White decided that his future lay in that treacherous and unknown wilderness, the Broadway production field. Equipped with the small life savings of $15,000, a good business mind and a thorough knowledge of the contemporary musical theater, he launched the expedition with the announcement of a forthcoming revue.

One of the legends of the American theater, forever recounted when showmen became reminiscent, is the story of Ziegfeld's attempt to dissuade White from entering into competition. This act of ducal magnificence must have been the result of some foreboding, more intuitive than reasoned. White, an unknown, could scarcely be counted a threat to the pre-eminence of the "Follies" producer.

Yet the story goes that Ned Wayburn dropped in to see Mr. White one fine afternoon to inform him that Ziegfeld was willing to pay him $2,000 a week for himself and Ann Pennington in a Ziegfeld show, if he would drop his own project for a revue.

"You can tell Ziegfeld," said White, slowly and with relish, "that I wil give him $2,500 for himself and Billie Burke in my show."

THAT the first "Scandals" ever reached the lights of Broadway was due to the winning salesmanship of the former hoofer, whose savings were eaten up before rehearsals were well under way. He managed to borrow the needed sums, obtained scenery and costumes on credit, and rang up the curtain on a revue featuring Ann Pennington, Moran and Mack, Lou Holtz, Lester Allen and himself.

With the exception of the lady of the dimples and the producer, the players were unfamiliar to the critics, whose sidewalk comments during intermission were not altogether complimentary. The music was by an unknown young composer named George Gershwin.

In spite of the impressiveness today of the register of entertainers at White's first revue, its life might have been of short duration were it not for the convenient transplanting of war from Flanders to the Forties, with the Actors' Equity Association calling its members out on strike against the theater managers.

White had happily overlooked enrollin gin the organization of managers in the flurry of preparing his show for New York, and his revue was allowed to continue, the only musical running at the time. As a result it stayed for four months and became an accredited hit of the day.

LUCKY? Perhaps. But George White learned quickly, and that introductory edition paved the way for the successes that were to come.

Lucrative returns from the first few productions gave White the opportunity for more lavish spending than he had been permitted theretofore, and he opened new vistas of gorgeousness with such elaborate displays as the breathtaking "Stairway to Paradise" scene.

"Building a stairway to paradise," sang the ascending chorus, "with a new step every day"—and George White tried manfully to live up to that promise, introducing in each revue some new step for the dance floors of the Nation.

A Director of a Tropical Film Has A Visitor's Usual Odd Experiences

Dick Thorpe Discovers All Strange Phenomena of Distant Islands.

By Richard Thorpe.
(Director of "Last of the Pagans")

THE South Seas are a land of idyllic romance, when one gazes on their beauties on the screen, or reads a dreamy novel about their tropic charms. But when you set out to direct a motion picture, translating this charm to the screen, you run against a good many other things.

Typhoons and temperament, sun showers "Underseas Black Widows," all complicate existence for the makers of pictures.

And, too, that mysterious thing the natives call tabu.

We didn't give this much credence when we started out on the trip. That was something of the old superstitious past, we reckoned. The islands are Christianized now.

But full well we learned its power. The natives, it is true, are Christians, but their heritage of the ages is this tabu.

For instance, we wanted them to sing a certain hymn in the scene where Mala marched to the mines with the gang of impressed laborers. We just couldn't get them to do it. Finally, an interpreter explained that this was a sacred song—and they wouldn't sing it because of tabu.

He suggested that it would be all right to change the words and sing the tune. After much deliberation this was done. That is simply one example of it.

We ran across the same thing when we wanted to reproduce a marriage ceremony, when we wanted to show a sacred native dance—when we wished to do a thousand and one things.

THESE partly explain the difficulties of filming players were the least of our troubles.

Mala, the Eskimo actor, is experienced. So is Lotus Long. These were the only two actors from Hollywood. The natives act instinctively—their dances dramatize legends of ancient ceremonies. They go about living their lives before the camera with the unconcern that in Hollywood is only acquired by great acting experience—in fact it's a Hollywood axiom that the great trick before the camera is to learn not to act.

Capricious weather is a constant factor of delay. We would go out, Clyde De Vinna, our cameraman, would set up on a gorgeous vista, in beautiful sunlight, our people would rehearse—then seemingly from nowhere black clouds would assemble—and in a few minutes a downpour would drench us. In a little while the clouds would pass and the sun shine again. Sometimes we had the phenomenon called a sun shower—rain and sunshine at the same time, the sun shining through rifts in rain clouds.

But these were merely delays—the typhoon was something else again.

We filmed one, cameras lashed to stakes, as the mighty wind hurled palm fronds clear through the walls of native buildings. Nothing—not even the spectacular thunderstorm of the islands—is as awe-inspiring as the typhoon. One sees a few clouds. Then one notices that the palms are moving in sudden gusts of wind—light but intermittent.

Then, suddenly, swift as a thunderbolt, the mighty wind strikes. Tall palms bend almost to the ground. Smaller buildings collapse with a bang. The wind continues several hours—then subsides almost as suddenly as it came, leaving wreckage where it passed.

SHARKS are a menace always. In fact, the natives won't go into the ocean at all, but bathe and wash in the interior lagoons. We had to catch a shark for a scene in a picture, and the native hunters in outrigger canoes went out in the search. Mala insisted on going with them. His harpooning skill, born of the Arctic, was perfect with the spears used by the Polynesians. He brought back a magnificent specimen.

Working about the coral islands has its difficulties. The corals are sharp as razors—it is almost impossible not to be cut. These cuts don't heal there for some reason or other—perhaps the diet. We all suffered until we got home.

Incidentally, there is an insect called the red bug there, which burrows under the skin. Joe Cook, our production manager, to this day bears the scars of these vicious little bugs.

There are no snakes on the islands, but there are poisonous fish, such as the black creature we called the "underseas black widow." This lurks in the shallows, but fortunately bites only when attacked.

De Vinna, the cameraman, who is venturesome, caught one. It is a globular creature with a sharp poisonous spine. Clyde also caught one of the poisonous red fish.

THE wild boars of the hills are interesting. Mala bagged several. They are good eating. Originally they were ordinary pigs. The missionaries brought them to the islands to raise a meat supply for the natives. The islands had no meat animals then, and the missionaries had an idea that craving for meat inspired cannibalism—hence tried the experiment of importing pigs. These escaped into the hills and ran wild and today are formidable adversaries for the hunter.

The natives cook them in pits lined with hot stones, and the herbs and leaves with which they cover them contribute a unique flavor.

For almost everything they don't like the natives blame the missionaries. Included are the wild boars, earthquakes—because they say one occurred the day the first missionary landed—they blame them for the taxes the government collects—but still they are very friendly and have universally taken up Christianity.

The natives are a hospitable, lovable, childlike people and it is sad to think that the influenza and other epidemics that have recently wracked the islands are taking such toll that this splendid race some day may cease to exist.

Perhaps one reason that Carole Lombard is called the best dressed woman in Hollywood is that she always does her own shopping and personally went hunting for the fabrics she wears in "Hands Across the Table."

Newcomers and Veterans Share Acting Honors

The Columbia Players' cast for "Inheritors" to be presented at Pierce Hall, December 18 and 19, includes 4 new members and 11 "old-timers."

One of the new faces, Elwood Godsall, already has made his debut—playing a bit in "Candlelight," the season opener, but the other three will be making bona fide Columbian debuts. They are Aline Wharton and Peggy Gusack, playing two slightly dizzy young collegians of 1920, and Edgar Gloten, who will play the famous role of Ira Morton, first done by Jasper Deeter in 1921 at the Provincetown Theater.

The three "debutantes" did their bit on the stage crew for the first play of the season.

The old-timers in the cast are Bunnie Skinner, Robert M. Miller, G. DeWitt Miller, Wade Robinson, Wayne Bobst, Betty Clark, Elizabeth Dyer, Edward Stansbury, B. A. P. Doehrer, Richard Kreuzburg and George Edwards.

Bring Two Hits Back to Little

A light musical romance and a masterful drama will be revived at the Little Theater this week.

"College Humor," tuneful comedy with Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie and Burns and Allen, will open today and run through Wednesday. Produced over two years ago when films of its type finally established themselves as real hit material, "College Humor" had many successful runs. In addition to the crooning of Bing Crosby and the foolishness of Burns and Allen the picture stars Richard Arlen and Mary Carlisle.

"Of Human Bondage," headlining Leslie Howard and Bette Davis, will be shown from Thursday through Saturday. Howard, as a crippled student, gives his usual fine performance.

Authorship and Values

EVADING, for the moment, the implications of the cinema's outstanding offering of the week, it is interesting to delve back into the remote era that produced the first of George White's justly celebrated, as the saying goes, "Scandals," the twelfth edition of which practically begins its metropolitan career in the National Theater tomorrow night.

Wallowing back through the years, not quite in the manner of a Tut-Ankh-Amen expedition, to be sure, but still back beyond the memory of the present generation of film-gazers, one discovers that Mr. White inaugurated his series of gay gaucheries in the National Theater on May 25, 1919.

That was quite a while ago as the crow flies.

And that was pretty late in the season for any legitimate attraction, socalled for nobody knows what reason, to be making its bow to a public primed for Memorial Day and the subsequent lalligagging of the "hot weather season."

But it was on May 25, nevertheless, that Mr. White, fresh from the ranks of vaudeville "hoofers," brought his first productional effort to the light of day in Mr. Rapley's century-old National Theater.

It is interesting to survey the cast that peopled the youthful impresario's initial venture into the realm of the theatrical vampires. Here they are:

Ann Pennington, Mabel Withee, Yvette Rugel—and whatever became of her and her gorgeous voice?—La Sylphe, Ethel Delmar, Dorothy Sinclair, Lois Leigh, Ona Munson, and who would have thought it? Ona must have been at least 2 years old at the time!

George White himself, in the flesh, also took a part, as did George Bickel and Ed Lee Wrothe, of the original team of Bickel, Watson and Wrothe, from which, strangely, Harry Watson was omitted, just as Wrothe had been from the team when the late Flo Ziegfeld brought George Bickel and Harry Watson up from burlesque to play the principal comedy roles in his "Ziegfeld Follies of 1907," the first in another antedating line of superlative revues.

Others who lent the luster of their talents to the first White "Scandals" included Lester Allen, not long up from burlesque himself; Bennett & Richards, Lowell B. Drew, Jack Squires—and there is a funny trick of the theater as years roll on. Jack Squires recently was seen on the stage of Loew's Fox Theater as proxy for Maj. Bowes and gong-clanger-in-chief for the second of the stage units sent out by the major in his "Amateur Theater of the Air" series of stage presentations. Jack, you will observe, dates back a few years, at least.

If the details of the first "Scandals" production are what is occasioning your restlessness, then it should be divulged that the book was written by Arthur Jackson and George White; music by Richard Whiting and Herbert Spencer. The whole gay business was staged by Mr. White and the Lohr Studios were responsible for the settings. Edgar McGregor stage-managed the whole thing.

* * * *

NOT less remarkable than the evanescent grandeur of the first "Scandals" is the nature of the offering which followed it in that remote late spring of 1919 on the stage of the National.

That was the year that George C. Tyler, venerable showman and the mainspring of Liebler & Co., through many seasons of honorable effort, brought his "stock" players to the Capital for a season of five weeks.

And what a five weeks they were!

All they managed to accomplish was to establish the fact that Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne were stars of the first rank.

It was this engagement, incidentally, that precipitated the marriage of the gifted young Wisconsin actor and the brilliant English actress, who ever since has shared his triumphs. And "triumphs" is the only word that will do.

But to get on to the business of Mr. Tyler and his company.

Their first bill was "On the Hiring Line," a comedy by the late Harvey O'Higgins and Harriet Ford, in which the principal roles were played by Helen Hayes, to be seen here next week in "Victoria Regina;" Glen Hunter, Emily Stevens—these are all names to conjure with, you youngsters—Fania Maranoff, Sidney Toler, Alfred Lunt and Josephine Hall.

Next in the Tyler repertoire came "Made o' Money"—or maybe it was "Maid o' Money"—in which the same cast appeared, plus the magnetic talents of Lynn Fontanne and Cornelia Skinner.

The last-named actress, of course, would be the Cornelia Otis Skinner, known to the present generation of theatergoers as the foremost diseuse of her day, daughter of Otis Skinner, dean of the American theater.

And then Mr. Tyler found it in his wisdom to present "A Young Man's Fancy," the comedy by John T. McIntyre, with Lunt and Fontanne starred, just as they always are today, and with William Lawton and a "Miss Welford" added.

One takes this "Miss Welford" to have been Nancy Welford, daughter of the famed comedian, Dallas Welford, last seen here with the "Moulin Rouge Caravan," a season or two ago, when Senator McAdoo was given to senatorial luncheons and the Palace Theater's stage to the midnight activities of an especially gifted troupe of screen players.

These may be the good old days, but the "good old days" were not so bad, either.

Human Dynamo Of Playhouse

popularization have been with "The Shimmy," "The Charleston" and "The Black Bottom."

With the march of the years came other "Scandals," scintillating extravaganzas that featured, among others, Paul Whiteman and his orchestra, W. C. Fields, Winnie Lightner, Willie and Eugene Howard, Frances Williams, Harry Richman, Tom Patricola, Rose Perfect, Everett Marshall, Ray Bolger and Rudy Vallee.

In between, he found time to produce an Ethiopian revue, "Runnin' Wild," with Sissle and Blake; "Manhattan Mary," a musical comedy with Ed Wynn; "Flying High," another hit musical, with Bert Lahr, and recently, "Melody," an operetta.

George White is a tireless worker. At rehearsals he dances with the girls from noon until they finally catch the knack of the steps, at whatever late hour that miracle may occur.

He knows his business from the ground up, having studied every phase of production. Rather than entrust a job to subordinates, he does it himself. He likes to sell tickets at his own box office and has had his hand in the shaping of songs and skits for all his shows.

THE man George White is indistinguishable from the showman White. He lives entirely in the world of the theater. It shares with his pastime, golf, his every waking moment, never allowing him the luxury of escape at any season or in any resort to which he may flee. It pursues him and reminds him of his next production.

He never misses a performance of his current show on Broadway. The past, the present and the future are all merged in the feverish activities of the man who is frequently keeping the present hit up to the mark, rehearsing its successor and planning still another production.

The public demands novelty. And George White delights in offering that ingredient unfailingly. "It's an enthralling game," he says of the show business, "keeping a step ahead of every other producer. I manage to keep going because of the constant thrill. A gambler can't quit while there are opponents to bet against."

distinguished actor of both stage and screen, both in this country and in England, whose impersonation of "Mr. Hobo" has earned a second week at the Belasco.

Comedian Puts New Slant on Fly Story

The often-written story of the fly getting into the sound microphone, thereby ruining a motion picture scene, was given a new version by Roscoe Karns, at Lone Pine, Calif., during a recent location scene.

Karns, playing a featured role with Gertrude Michael and George Murphy in "Woman Trap," was enacting a closeup with Gertrude, and after five trial-takes the perfect shot was being run through the camera, when a desert gnat flew up Roscoe's nose.

It wasn't the buzzing of the gnat that ruined the scene — it was Karn's loud sneeze.

Strong Cast Is Boasted by New GayetyCompany

The stars of "Dainty Dolls," the new Independent Circuit burlesque attraction, coming to the Gayety Theater and opening with the usual matinee today, are Sunya ("Smiles") Slane, whose dancing has made her fame widespread wherever burlesque is known, and Sammy Weston, Hebrew comedian of recognized talent.

Among the many contributing performers are Bobby Burns, juvenile lyric tenor; Lew Lewis, jolly Dutch comic; Eddie Haywood, vigorous straight; Cynthia Michell, soubrette; Ruth Donald, prima donna; Renee, classical dancer; Rube Wallman, specialty artist; Harry (Boob) Myers, comedian, and Don Trent, another clever straight man, rounding out what should prove to be an enjoyable program.

Theater News and Bits of Gossip About Plays and Players of Midwinter Season

One of Washington's Brilliant Stars Has Had Notable Career

Helen Hayes' Stage and Screen Triumphs Have Spanned the Range of Drama from the Lively Comedies to High Tragedy.

ONE of the most distinguished native citizens of Washington, who is neither a politician nor a diplomat, will shortly return to her birthplace for one of her rare professional visits.

On December 16 Helen Hayes, one of the most versatile and distinguished actresses in the American theater, by virtue of her triumphs on both stage and screen, will come to the National Theater in Washington in her new starring vehicle, "Victoria Regina," which Gilbert Miller will present for a week prior to its New York engagement.

Helen Hayes has come a long way since her first Washington appearance—an imitation at an evening party, at the age of 5. The important fact, as far as her career was concerned, was that the famous actor, Lew Fields, was present, and was so delighted with the little girl's performance that he said to her mother, "When your little girl is ready to go on the stage, bring her to me in New York, and I will give her a part."

It is impossible to believe that Helen Hayes would not stand at precisely the same eminent position she now occupies if Mr. Fields had not been present on that evening. Speculation aside, however, Lew Fields' promise undoubtedly diminished the usual hardships of a young actress.

When small Helen and her mother, only nine years later, made the journey to New York, and reminded Mr. Felds of his pledge, the actor needed very little reminding, and promptly gave the child the role of "Little Mime" in his forthcoming play, "Old Dutch," in which she gave the same imitation which had enchanted him at the Washington party nine years before.

HER first real, personal success came in the title role of "Pollyanna," in which she toured in 1917-18, and there followed the usual run of leading ingenue parts in "Penrod," "Dear Brutus," with William Gillette; "Clarence," and "To The Ladies."

Her own talent and good sense were the forces which saved her from that bogey of the Broadway player, type-casting.

As Cleopatra, in Bernard Shaw's immortal comedy of "Caesar and Cleopatra," Helen Hayes proved once and for all what a good many people had already suspected, that here was a gift for the theater which would soar far beyond the portrayal of "sweet young things."

Cleopatra was, consequently, followed by such varied assignments as Maggie Wylie in "What Every Woman Knows," and then the famous role of the young Southern girl, "Norma Besant, in "Coquette," in which, in the course of one evening, her performance ranged from her usual charm to high tragedy.

"Coquette" was followed by "Mr. Gilhooley," in which she played another dramatic role, that of Nellie Fitzpatrick, and then, with a sudden about-face, Helen Hayes went back to pure comedy, in "Petticoat Influence" and "The Good Fairy" (both produced by her present sponsor, Gilbert Miller) to display a dazzling technique miles ahead of her previous performances in that field.

AFTER a long season's run in "The Good Fairy," Miss Hayes went to Hollywood, where she was launched on a career of strikingly varied roles by her triumph in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet," for which the National Motion Picture Academy gave her its annual award in 1932.

And just about the time when her succession of fine performances in "Night Flight," "A Farewell to Arms" and "Arrowsmith" had convinced the public that the stage had lost a great actress to the screen, Helen Hayes came back to the theater in the magnificently tragic role in "Mary of Scotland," Maxwell Anderson's blank-verse, historical drama that had its premiere here in the National Theater, to which she now returns.

It is a tremendous record for a still-young career. It will be even more impressive when "Victoria Regina," Miss Hayes' new role, in which she enacts the great English sovereign from the age of 19 to 80, in the course of one evening, is added to it.

Once Again Hollywood Affords Material for Broadway Laughs

By Willard Keefe.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The frenzied barter between Hollywood and Broadway seems to give the theater the better of things.

This time it is "Boy Meets Girl," which finds fresh laughter in the Hollywood scene, releasing last season's "Personal Appearance" to service on the road. Before that, of course, there was "Once in a Lifetime," and, ages ago, "Merton of the Movies," all quite pointedly remarking what fools these immortals of the cinema be.

What makes this kind of kidding so imperishable?

By this time it might reasonably be supposed that gags about the film magnates, illiteracy, the measureless vanity of the stars, the fatuous social pageantry have been worn as thin as the mother-in-law nifty. Yet here they are again, blended into a most enjoyable comedy.

SO good is this play by Samuel and Bella Spewack—profiting nobody knows how much by the magic direction of George Abbott—that it arrived in town on the evening following another comedy, "First Lady," and found practically the same audience, bound by tradition to be exacting, ready slaves to its humors.

Jerome Cowan and Allan Joslyn are faultless as the restless authors, and Joyce Arling gives to the informal mother of the piece a wide-eyed stupidity, too beautiful ever to forget. This trio's anxieties over a baby film star provides a frolicsome evening.

The play, then, hits no pioneering pathways. Studio alumni themselves, the Spewacks merely made careful note of the more irrational thought processes about them and decided the resultant mosaic was too good to be kept from the public.

The public is fighting its way to the box-office to express agreement.

IT is fortunate this good fun came when it did, for it alleviated the disappointment everybody felt over the failure of the usually dependable group theater.

The group began its season with a wan and faltering drama called "Weep for the Virgins." It is a story which shows painstaking care and finished performance and says nothing—anyway, nothing that interests you.

The work of Nellise Child, this drama of the California cannery peasants, laments the wreck a dimwitted mother has made of the lives of three daughters. Goaded to dreams they have no hope of achieving, the daughters rebel and —well, they rebel, that's all.

Earl Carroll Is Sending Us His 'Sketch Book'

Long-Run, New York Hit Is Satire on History, Rich in Racy Humor.

The Earl Carroll "Sketch Book," which opens Monday, December 30, in the National Theater, is the second edition of this revue series, which had a most auspicious inauguration a few seasons ago.

At that time Mr. Carroll had a three-month interlude at his theater between editions of the Earl Carroll "Vanities." Hastily he assembled a revue rich in comedy, headed by Will Mahoney, and just a trifle less pretentious and less ornate in scenic grandeur than a "Vanities." The most beautiful girls in the world were used in abundance.

The result was more than a year's run in New York and the biggest monetary returns of any offering in Mr. Carroll's career.

The same formula has been followed in this new "Sketch Book." It was hailed as the biggest laughing revue in years. However, Mr. Carroll gave this current "Sketch Book" more scenic and costume magnificence than the first one.

The "Moonlight and Mirrors" ballet is said to be one of the most costly and dazzling backgrounds ever created for a revue. The investiture of the "Indian Uprising" ballet is another opulent stage picture.

The fact that "Sketch Book" survived throughout the hot summer at the Winter Garden and finished out seven months at the Majestic Theater is sufficient indication of the piece's merit. This is a new record for a revue in New York since 1929.

"Sketch Book" is a departure in that it follows a theme—it satirizes and burlesques the high lights of American history from the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock to the arrival of the New Deal.

So hilarious is the comedy portion of this revue that many patrons have attended in New York many times, one banker having a record of 62 views of the show. The cast is intact for this tour in beauties and principals.

Studio Theater Will Open Its Second Season

The second subscription season of the Studio of Theater Arts will open next Tuesday, December 10, with the production of the popular Soviet farce, "Squaring the Circle." The play will be presented at Wardman Park Theater and will be repeated Wednesday night.

A modern Russian favorite, it deals with the ludicrous predicament which confronts Vasya and Abram, two members of the All-Union League of Communist Youth. Faced with a personal housing shortage, the two roommates, nevertheless, decide to get married and their troubles multiply when the brides turn out to be hard to get along with.

Members of the Russian colony in Washington have been co-operating with Constance Connor Brown, director of the Studio, is making sure that details of the production are authentic. Mrs. Valdimir Romm, wife of the local correspondent of the Moscow newspapers, Izvestia, has been attending rehearsals and assisting with the costumes and the two incidental songs. Mrs. Romm, herself an actress of ability, has seen the Moscow Art Theater's production of "Squaring the Circle."

Jacob Kazze, a native Russian and a former member of the late John Philip Sousa's band, has also assisted with the music, and Mrs. Ray Sigler has coached members of the cast in pronunciation of Russian names.

A Brief Sketch Of That Cocky Thespian, Tracy

Graduate of Eleven Schools Proves to Be an Able Fellow in Theater.

Spencer Tracy attended 11 schools and finally got a diploma from the College of Hard Knocks.

Nine of the schools were in Wisconsin, two were in Kansas. And that doesn't include the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York, or the United States Naval Training Station at Norfolk, Va., which brings the total to a baker's dozen.

Spencer was born in Milwaukee. His parents were well-to-do, but couldn't keep him from spending his playtime with "Mousie" and "Rattie," sons of a Southside saloon keeper. "Mousie" now is a multimillionaire Wall street broker.

When Spencer was in his eighth school, the West Side High at Milwaukee, the war broke out. He tried to join the infantry, but wasn't old enough. The Navy took him.

After the war he went to three more schools, then decided to become an actor. Attended the Dramatic Arts Academy until his money ran out, then slept in the park until he landed a $15-a-week job with the Theater Guild in "R. U. R." Gradually increased his salary to $40, but when the show closed he was broke again. Some weeks later was thankful for $20 a week with a stock company in White Plains, N. Y., and later jumped to Hollywood.

Ethel Barrymore gave him a part in "Royal Fandango." Then he went back to stock. He next crashed Broadway and stepped to films by way of his triumph in "The Last Mile." In Hollywood he made 24 pictures in rapid succession.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer signed him to a long-term contract. His most recent pictures are "Riff Raff," with Jean Harlow, and "Whipsaw," in which he is co-starred with Myrna Loy.

Fencing Added To Curriculum As Stage Asset

A department of fencing has been established in the National Academy of Stage Training which, until recently, was known as the Clifford Brooke Academy. The new department is under the direction of Maj. Edward L. Dyer.

The announcement is made by S. E. Cochran, who says:

"Fencing is considered an important branch of a full curriculum of stage training. Many actors, particularly those in motion pictures, have found training and experience in fencing a strong asset in securing engagements. No few actors have found it necessary to have instruction in fencing late in their careers in order to play assigned parts in which fencing has been necessary.

"Fencing has attained popularity as a recreation and physical training medium and a great demand for instruction has been manifested.

"To afford its students instruction and training in fencing, and to offer the same opportunity to others who are not dramatic students, the academy has installed this new department.

"Maj. Dyer is a swordsman of reputation who has crossed foils with many of the leading modern swordsmen and who was a pupil of the maitre d'armes of the Sixteenth Regiment, French Dragoons. He has had wide experience as an instructor and has conducted his own schools for a number of years."

Straight From the Studios

If China Can Not Combat Japan, at Least She Can Dominate Film-Making on Hollywood's Lots; Notes of Cinema Great and Almost.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 7.—This is the heyday for Chinese in motion pictures. Some 400 of them are engaged now at Paramount, RKO and Universal studios in musicals and dramas of the gaslit era, and another 200 will find work when M-G-M launches "The Good Earth."

Mae West, with a nostalgia for the mauve decades, is surrounded by Celestials in several scenes of "Klondike Lou." She has given strict orders that all the handsome Chinese be got for her. That was the beginning of the raid on Chinatown talent, and now the defection of the denizens from the quarter has thrown its commercial life into chaos.

Following soon after was Lewis Milestone's demand for 55 more Chinese to appear with Bing Crosby and Ethel Merman in "Anything Goes." They came, all made up and costumed, sporting synthetic pigtails.

At RKO, the "Mother Lode" sets are thick with Orientals—their makeup resembling the pioneers who came over to join in the gold rush of '49 but remained to do the laundry. Only a few of them joined the diggings, nor are these being overlooked in this drama of the stampede, in which Richard Dix and Leila Hyams are featured.

"Sutter's Gold," another melodrama of the yellow lure, required a large representation of Orientals, and that just about exhausted Chinatown's available youth.

That is one reason why M.-G.-M. is holding up its production schedule on "The Good Earth." They will have to wait another three weeks before Paramount, RKO and Universal release their troupes.

The directors on these pictures say all Chinese like to act, and their gift for pantomime is greater than the Occidentals.'

Wher Angels Fear to Tread.

In America and England, executives think twice before speaking harshly to Leslie Howard. So it was no wonder that a group of workers recently stood aghast when Bill Murdock, electrical troubleshooter at the Warner studio, let him have it. Howard had some time off from "Petrified Forest" and borrowed Murdock's bicycle to pedal over and have a chat with his old friend, Frederic Marsh, who was working on another set. He was absent an hour and Murdock was standing at the stage door in a fury awaiting him. In no uncertain terms he informed Howard that he had a lot of "crust" to go joy-riding on the bike when there was work to do. And Howard took the dressing-down like a good trouper.

Gail's Sad Lot.

Gail Patrick is sad today because Bob Cobb, maitre d' at the Brown Derby, is en route for Europe, where he plans to study the Continental cuisine. The actress and Bob have been constant companions these past months and there have been rumors of engagement. But Gail is doubly sad. First, because Bob is leaving, and again, because he'll know so much about food by the time he returns that she'll have little to say about the family menu when and if their romance comes to marriage.

Uncanny Canines.

Bing Crosby didn't know what he bargained for when he became a stray-dog fancier recently, but he knows now.

When the crooner leased the Marion Davies property at Santa Monica, he set out to be very careful of the garden and forthwith had a kennel built for each of his eight dogs. Then came No. 9, a stray, necessitating another dog house. Since then, Bing observes, "stray dogs are just like panhandlers; they know where other dogs received hospitality. Positively uncanny."

No. 10 pulled up last Sunday, was taken in, and the carpenter got busy again. And Monday came No. 11, a saffron-colored mongrel, which took one look at the place and decided to stay. So the hammer and saw are at it again.

Was His Face White!

Still proud of his hacienda in the Los Feliz hills, although he has occupied it for years, Cecil B. De Mille had the wings of that pride clipped by Grover Jones, Paramount scenarist.

Showing Jones through the home one evening, De Mille thought he had the writer pretty well impressed. Finally they arrived at the architectural piece de resistance, the cozy little theater, where De Mille runs off a movie for his guests twice a week. On the floor, just off from De Mille's private lounge chair, was a huge brass bowl 3 feet in diameter, which serves as the director's ash tray, its size being necessary in the darkness. Just before De Mille could explain this, Jones regarded the bowl with mock bewilderment, then glanced at the beams overhead, and asked:

"What does this mean, Cecil? A leak in the ceiling?"

Nice Work, Gary.

While on the subject of personal pride, there's the other deflating incident that befell Gary Cooper on the "Desire" set at Paramount. Cooper had come on the set, direct from a hunting expedition, and triumphantly started to distribute his bag of Mallards among the crew, when one of the technicians. Art Camp, noticed a steel band on one of the fowls. "That bird," Camp declared, "flew my coop a few days ago and moreover, it was trained to come down and perch on the end of a gun barrel."

Horsefeathers, To You, Sir.

"Please wire immediately what disposition to make of horse and buggy left on piano in room 930. (Signed) Mr. and Mrs. St. Francis."

Bing Crosby, back from Bay Meadows for the Thanksgiving feast, received that telegram from his cronies in San Francisco, which he says bears no truth in it, because he didn't stop at the St. Francis Hotel, but at the same time he thought it funny enough for print.

Critic Regards Youthful Dmitri Shostakovich as Shining Star of Soviet Music

Washington to Hear Symphony This Week

'Young, Dynamic, Bespectacled' Is Picture Slonimski Draws of Russian Composer; Who, He Finds, Admires Stravinski and Works Tremendously.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

With the local premiere of Dmitri Shostakovich's first symphony only four days away, the readers of this column may be interested in a glimpse of the composer through the eyes of Nikolai Slonimski, who writes about a recent visit to Russia in the current issue of "Modern Music," the quarterly magazine published by the League of Composers. Mr. Slonimski returned to his native land, after an expatriation of 20 years, to check his information about Soviet music at first hand.

By reading all the Soviet musical magazines he had kept himself fairly conversant with the currents and controversies, and had followed the rise and downfall of the RAPM, a group of self-styled proletarian composers dissolved by government degree in 1932 along with similar organizations in literature and art. He was aware, he says, that Mossolov's exercises in machine music are considered less important within the U. S. S. R. than they are elsewhere, and that the old Russian school is revered by the radicals to an astonishing extent. He reports, for example, that an authoritative Russian critic, wishing to pay a high compliment to Shostakovich's opera, "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk," compared it to Chaikovski's "Pikovaya Dama."

Now let Mr. Slonimski speak for himself: "The shining star of Soviet music is, of course, young Shostakovich. (He accents his name on the third syllable.) So it was not without frank curiosity that I went to see him in his apartment on Dmitrovski Pereulok in Leningrad. I momentarily forgot whether it was house number 5, apartment number 3, or the other way around. But it was a warm September day, and the windows were opened; someone was playing the piano so energetically, and the music was so unmistakable in style, that I knew at once this could be only Shostakovich.

"I directed my steps toward the sounds; the door bell rang inharmoniously, and the music stopped. So this is Shostakovich, at last! Young, dynamic, bespectacled, he looks like his pictures—a rare phenomenon in the musical world. We went into the studio and plunged right off into a discussion of his music. I flung questions at him.

"Does he believe in utilizing vulgar music (galops, sentimental street songs, military band marches) without submitting it to musical distillation? How does he regard his work, 'The Nose,' which was driven out of the opera house by the then powerful RAPM? Why did he depart from the modern uses of this opera's music? Is he interested in the 12-tone system?

"Shostakovich was eager to answer. He does not repudiate the music of 'The Nose,' and he would show me the full score, as soon as it was returned from the theater, where it still remained despite the cessation of performances. Yes, he was interested in the 12-tone system; he knows Schoenberg, and still better does he know Berg, but he finds that he cannot do anything with the Vienna idiom. He tried, though, and some of his progressions reflect the schooling of Schoenberg.

"I told him that Stravinski was present at the performance of 'Lady Macbeth' in New York and commented favorably on the music. Shostakovich admires Stravinski, and produced a four-hand piano arrangement which he had made from the score of the 'Symphony of Psalms' in order to absorb the musical substance by frequent playing and hearing. I was frankly amazed at his patience and industry, and this in the midst of composition of his own fourth symphony, which he feels is going to be his most important work.

"It was my turn to give information. Among other things, I told him of the orchestra of percussion that Varese uses in 'Ionization.' To my surprise he had heard of the work, and even had the score, which was given to him by a friend. He seemed to be well informed about music abroad. During his recent trip to Turkey he got hold of Stokowski's recording of his own first symphony and brought the disk home.

"In the meantime tea was served, and I met Shostakovich's mother and his wife. We started a vague conversation about his coming to America. He is shy about his pianistic powers, although he graduated from the piano section of the Leningrad Conservatory as early as 1923. But he is going to compose a special concerto for America—next year, perhaps. The present piano concerto is scored for string orchestra and a trumpet only, and it has already been played in America."

One regrets that Mr. Slonimski is not a better reporter. His interview leaves us unsatisfied on many points, and it is curiously uncommunicative about the personality of Shostakovich. One would like to know the manner of man he is, aside from being "young, dynamic, bespectacled." What are his tastes in literature; what is his individual philosophy, apart from his political communism? Is he fair or dark? Does he read any language other than Russian? What does he think of Spengler, of Pareto, of Korzybski?

The November-December number of "Modern Music," like all its predecessors, is full of interesting material, such as Alfred Einstein's discussion of "The Composer, the State and Today," Edward Burlingame Hill's sympathetic apercu of Charles Martin Loeffler, and H. H. Stuckenschmidt's article on opera in Germany today. This lively periodical, which can be obtained at Brentano's or directly from the League of Composers at 113 West Fifty-seventh street, New York, is required reading for those who wish to keep up to date in music's permutations.

The league, by the bye, has just issued an index to the 12 volumes of "Modern Music," by means of which one can run down with dispatch any article as far back as November of 1924. To glance through this index is to realize the extent and the importance of the educational work which the league has accomplished.

Composer Club Assists Dancers For 3d Event

Program Will Be Presented Under Community Center Auspices Wednesday.

Joining forces for the third time, the Washington Composers Club and the Lisa Gardiner Dancers will present a program of new compositions on Wednesday night at 8:30 in Roosevelt Auditorium, under the auspices of the Community Center department. The composers represented are Mary Howe, Dorothy Radde Emery, Henry S. Gregor, Edward C. Potter, R. Deane Shure and LaSalle Spier.

Mary Howe's "Valse Plaintive" will be danced by Mary Day. Mrs. Emery's "Desert Call," based on Balinese themes, will be presented by a group. From Edward C. Potter's opera, "Ishtar," a Babylonian ballet number will be danced by the entire ensemble.

LaSalle Spier, whose clever dance pantomimes are attaining more than a local reputation, will have two of these humorous numbers on the program. In the first, "Bowery," Alice Louise Hunter will impersonate a young tough, assisted by the group and several young actors; the second, titled "The Last Knock," depicts the plight of a poor artist, and features Anton Hardt and Marian Wolberg.

Three episodes from R. Deane Shure's piano suite, "Lyric Washington," will offer a trio of dancers in "Mirror Pool," an ensemble in "Boating on the Potomac," and a duo in "Topsy on Tenth Street." Lisa Gardiner will participate in only one number, Henry S. Gregor's "Nocturne Fantastique," in which she will present a "Danse d'Apache" with Mikhail Nikolov, who is coming from Baltimore for the occasion.

Mr. Gregor will also have on the program a pantomime, "The King's Highway," with Greta Ruth Atkin as the "little king." An "army" of four (Polly Prickett, Fillis Speich, Constance Carey and Marian Wolberg) fights gallantly while the king eats lollipops, and eventually awards a decoration to each valiant warrior.

Edward Rechlin to Play At Memorial for Bach

Edward Rechlin, American organist, particularly distinguished for his readings of Bach and other composers of that period, will give a recital tomorrow night at 8:15 in the Universalist National Memorial Church, Sixteenth and S streets northwest, under the auspices of Trinity Lutheran Church and in commemoration of Bach's 250th anniversary. The recital is open to the public without charge.

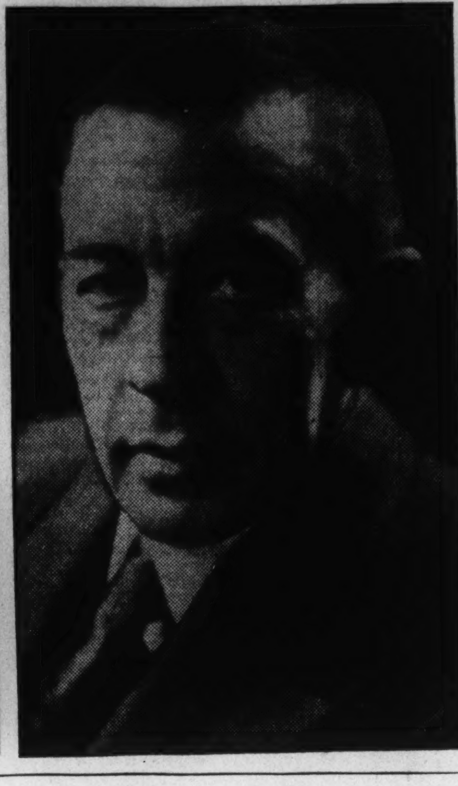
The following program is announced: Prelude and Fugue (Walther), "Jesus, Priceless Treasure" (Walther), Sonatina (Ritter), Chorale (Krebs), Toccata (Buxtehude), Improvisation (Rechlin), "Komm, Heiliger Geist," "Christ unser Herr, zum Jordan Kam," Fantasia and Fugue in A minor (Bach).

H. B. W. Miles presented 18 pupils in a piano recital on November 30 in the Washington Club.

Neighborhood House Music School (470 N street southwest) is presenting William Kurasch, of Philadelphia, in a violin recital on Thursday night at 8.

Lisa Gardiner and Mikhail Nikolov in "Danse d'Apache," which will be seen on Wednesday night at the Washington Composers' Club dance program in Roosevelt Auditorium.

Kirsten Flagstad, Metropolitan Opera soprano, who will be presented by Mrs. Lawrence Townsend in joint recital with Roman Totenberg, Polish violinist, on Wednesday morning, December 18, in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom.



Sergei Rakhmaninov, eminent Russian composer-pianist, who will give a recital on Tuesday evening in Constitution Hall, under management of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey.

Symphony's Program Contrasts Musical Modes

Locatelli's "Funeral" and Shostakovich's Work Listed.

Returning this week from its first tour of the north Atlantic States and Canada, the National Symphony Orchestra will resume its concerts in Constitution Hall Thursday afternoon with a program in which the musical manners of the early eighteenth and the early twentieth centuries will be contrasted in the "Funeral" Symphony by Locatelli and Dmitri Shostakovich's first symphony in F minor. Other items announced by Hans Kindler are the waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier," by Richard Strauss, and an intermezzo from "Goyescas," by Enrique Granados.

Locatelli, who was born in Bergamo in 1693 and died in Amsterdam in 1764, composed for the violin works which in technical brilliance and difficulty are surpassed only by those of Paganini. To modern auditors, familiar only with some of these violin pieces, his symphony will come as a revelation. It was written after the death of Locatelli's wife.

Skilfully Constructed.

Built in the strict classic form of that period, it shows exceptional skill in construction. The fugue of the first movement is strong in its emotional expression of grief. The second movement, more lively in mood, has resemblances to certain of Bach's lighter passages. The third foretells the composer's resignation to his loss, and the finale, titled "La Consolazione," quite convincingly shows that he has found surcease for sorrow.

Dmitri Shostakovich, the most widely known of the young Soviet composers, is only 30 years old. His accomplishments during the past decade have been remarkable not only for their sensationalism, but also for their significance. His opera, "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk," after arousing much discussion in Europe, was produced in the United States last year, and was the first Soviet musical work for the stage to be performed in this country.

What "Lady Macbeth" was to the theater, Shostakovich's symphonies have been to the concert hall. Like the opera, they are not universally approved, but they invariably arrest and hold the attention. Their prime characteristic is an irresistible vitality expended in social propaganda.

The F minor symphony which Dr. Kindler will conduct in its Washington premiere, is most concise and contains no development sections. Shostakovich says what he has to say and then stops. This compactness is most evident in the first movement, which sets forth the themes precisely in strong and straightforward exposition.

Finale Sympathetic.

The second movement develops a sardonic mood, while the third is melancholy, rising to a portentous climax. The composer reveals himself clearly and eloquently in the deeply felt finale, which is extremely personal and sympathetic.

The Richard Strauss waltzes from "The Cavalier of the Rose" are deservedly popular in the concert hall because of their Viennese lilt. Enrique Granados y Campina is best known for his brilliant piano compositions, which are suffused with genuine Spanish atmosphere. His opera, "Goyescas," which had its inspiration in the paintings of Goya, was performed at the Metropolitan in 1916. It was while he was returning to Europe after this production that Granados met his death when the liner Sussex was sunk in the English Channel by a German submarine.

Next Sunday afternoon Dr. Kindler will conduct the National Symphony in an operatic program featuring Irra Petina, the young American mezzo-soprano, who has been a member of the Metropolitan Opera for the last two seasons. She will make her Washington debut under the most favorable circumstances, for she will be thoroughly at home in her arias.

The second half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Carmen." Miss Petina will sing the "Habanera," the "Seguedilla," the "Chanson Boheme" and the card scene, while the purely orchestral numbers will be the preludes to the second, third and fourth acts of the opera. The first half of the program will contain the overture to "Die Meistersinger" and selections from other operas, including Verdi's "Otello."

Orchestra Will Play Thursday on Return From Its Tour.

As these lines are being written the National Symphony is winning new laurels away from home. Last Wednesday night it gave the first concert of the tour in Hartford, and on Thursday and Friday nights it played in Ottawa and Quebec. Last night it was heard in Montreal, and this afternoon it will be playing at Skidmore College, Saratoga Springs. Tomorrow night it will make its Boston debut in Symphony Hall.

Arts Club Arranges Christmas Program

Choral Group Will Give Two Concerts Next Week.

Now in its fifth season, the choral group of the Arts Club will give its Christmas concert on Wednesday night, December 18, in the club auditorium, and will repeat the program on Friday night in the Washington Club. Otto Torney Simon is the director, with Katherine Morrison as solo pianist and accompanist.

The chorus, which has its closed quota of members, includes many soloists. An incidental solo in the Cornelius number will be sung by Fulton Lewis. The program is announced as follows:

"Sleepers, Wake" (Bach), "O Thou That Tellest Good Tidings," "His Yoke Is Easy and His Burden Is Light," "Lift Up Your Heads, O Ye Gates" (Handel), "O Magnum Mysterium" (Vittoria), "Three Kings Have Journeyed" (Cornelius), "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming" (Praetorius), "Hallelujah" (Franck). Miss Morrison, as soloist, will play a Bach chorale-prelude and the pastorale from "Messiah"

Thiemeyer Celebrates Anniversary at Trinity

John S. Thiemeyer, well-known Washington musician, is celebrating his thirtieth anniversary as organist and choirmaster of Trinity Lutheran Church. He came here in 1905 from Baltimore, where his posts had included that of organist in Westminster Presbyterian Church, where Edgar Allan Poe is buried.

At Trinity he has directed many important programs. In 1912 he gave there a memorable performance of Stainer's "The Crucifixion." In 1916 he had the honor of playing for President Wilson in Central Presbyterian Church.

Notes of the Musical World

Georgia Campbell, soprano; Kathryn Sale English, contralto; Wilfrid Smith, tenor, and Howard Severe, bass-barytone, are announced as soloists in the presentation of Handel's "Messiah" by the Washington Oratorio Society on Sunday afternoon, December 22. There will be a 25-piece orchestra, assisted by Edith B. Athey, organist, and Marjorie Davis, pianist. George F. Kortzenborn will conduct.

Ethel Hoffman Kane will present Gertrude Wollner, of New York, in an invitational recital on Sunday evening, December 15, in her studio of motor-mental rhythmics. Mrs. Wollner, who is residing in Washington for the winter, will demonstrate the subject, "Creative Music."

Lewis Atwater, organist, will be assisted by Charles Trowbridge Tittmann, basso, in a half-hour program of Bach music at 5 o'clock this afternoon in All Souls' Unitarian Church.

Mary Gresham will conduct the second symposium in the Marian Chace School for the Dance at 9 o'clock this evening. The subject of the lecture and discussion is "The Relation of Music to the Dance." These symposia are open to all those who are interested in the dance from any angle.

Scholes Presents Saga Of Music Upon Records

Columbia Series Commended as Admirable Work With the Technique of the Versatile Dolmetsches Outstanding Among Phonograph Artists.

The music historian has always been at a disadvantage. The writer of a history of painting uses illustration in no small way to strengthen his account. The writer of a history of literature probably devotes more space to significant quotations than to original comment.

This observation of Percy A. Scholes summarizes his introduction to a new history, "The Columbia History of Music Through Ear and Eye." He is proposing a history filled not with musical notation to amplify the meaning of the text, but with a "series of living examples." With the aid of phonograph facilities furnished by the Columbia Phonograph Co. he has set out to show what the music he is talking about sounded like.

Now there are two ways to achieve such a task. Mr. Scholes might have dusted off the old manuscripts he wanted and assigned them to artists using modern instruments of musical reproduction. As a result, we would have had, for example, a prelude from the "Well-Tempered Clavichord," played on a modern pianoforte.

But Scholes has carried his "Illustrating" a step farther. He has gone back to the ancient instruments, for which the music was composed. And we have a recording of the Bach Prelude No. 1 of the "48," played by Arnold Dolmetsch on the clavichord. Thus, as the author of our history has pointed out, we have the aid "of artists and directing authorities in special sympathy with the varying periods, styles and composers," and "the listener will be enabled to realize not merely the historical significance of the composition performed, but also their real beauty."

No idle fancy was this. The degree to which Mr. Scholes, his aids and Columbia have captured this beauty is astonishing, nothing short of thrilling. Records like these haven't come to us before, and because of their peculiar nature probably won't come again. This, and the fact that this rare music is now as available as the week's dance hit, make the history set something very unusual to talk about.

Ingenius Illustrator.

We spoke of Arnold Dolmetsch as one of the artists. It was not a random mention. This man is the ingenius "illustrator" of Mr. Scholes text. Rather he is the chief illustrator, for he has many assistants, including the several members of his family, all of whom know ancient instruments as they know a knife, a fork, a spoon. Actually they seem to live on the spiritual food conveyed to them, and to us, through these old viols, clavichords, harpischords, and lutes.

The music of the Dolmetsch family is said to represent not a revival of the old music, but a survival. Dolmetsches have been playing it ever since it was written. The talent of this famous family of instrumentalists and instrument makers has been handed down from father to son in a manner that parallels that of the Bachs.

The first Arnold Dolmetsch was a contemporary of Beethoven, and was influential in having printed from an actual holograph copy of Bach an edition of the 8 preludes and fugues that stands as the best in existence. He taught his son, Rudolph, to play the "Well-Tempered Clavichord" on the clavichord, and Dolmetsch fathers have been teaching their sons to do likewise ever since.

Music Has Majesty.

The Dolmetsches (there are at least six of the present family playing) present much of the music in the first two volumes of Mr. Scholes' history—the only two that have been released in America. They play, for example, a "Fantasy for a Chest of Viols" (six), by Thomas Weelkes (1575 to 1623). The music has the sweep and majesty of a Bach work for organ.

This family does not do all the playing. Under the direction of Sir Richard Terry, formerly director of music at Westminster Cathedral in London, we hear a choir singing tenth and eleventh century plainsong (parallel), and several selections showing choral development, one of which is the sanctus and hosanna from Palestrina's "Missa Papae Marcelli." We hear early secular music and madigrals recorded by the St. George's Singers, directed by Dr. E. H. Fellowes.

In the exhibition of late seventeenth century style we get an exciting rendition of Corelli's "La Folia," a theme and variations on the repertoire of many present day violinists, who play either with piano or with orchestra. But in this set we hear it as a piece for violin (Bratza) and harpsichord (Frederic Jackson). Here is the combination the piece was written for and here is strong evidence that the combination should never have been dissolved. The violin and harpsichord were made for each other.

The first two volumes take the history up to about 1750. Volume I is titled "To the Opening of the Seventeenth Century." Volume II proceeds from the beginning of the opera and oratorio to the death of Bach and Handel. With each volume of text—the books are really pamphlets of 50 pages each—go eight records. They are the 10-inch discs. There will be four or five more volumes before the history is brought up to date. J. W.

Czarist Officers In Male Chorus Sing Here Today

Don Cossack Organization Appearing Under Sergei Jarov's Direction.

Under the direction of Sergei Jarov, the Don Cossack Russian Male Chorus will make its sixth consecutive annual appearance in Constitution Hall this afternoon at 4 o'clock, under the management of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. This popular organization, composed of 32 former cavalry officers of the Russian imperial army, celebrated its 3,000th concert in Carnegie Hall, New York, on November 29 with appropriate ceremonies, including an introduction by Grand Duchess Marie.

As usual, the program is divided into three parts, the first of which is devoted to Russian liturgical music by Grechaninov, Chaikovski, Kastalki, Chesnokov and Bortnianski. The second part consists of Cossack songs and the third part of folk songs. In the second part will be heard a new composition by Shvedov, written for and dedicated to the organization.

Novelty Is Historical.

This novelty relates the history of the Cossack Chorus, beginning with the mobilization in 1914, and describing in turn the struggles of the war, the outbreak of the Russian revolution, the vicissitudes of the civil war, the internment of the officers in Bulgaria, the formation of the chorus and the subsequent march to fame.

The program includes the song of the Volga barge-haulers, the song of the Indian guest from Rimski-Korsakov's opera, "Sadko;" a selection from the same composer's "The Invisible City of Kitesh," and an old polka arranged by Dobroven, a Caucasian song by Shvedov, and a number of stirring Cossack songs.

Sergei Rakhmaninov, the distinguished Russian composer-pianist, will give a recital on Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock in Constitution Hall, appearing as the third attraction in Mrs. Dorsey's evening series. His program will be the same as the one he recently played for enthusiastic audiences in New York and Boston.

Opens With Beethoven.

The recital opens with Beethoven's 32 variations in C minor, which will be followed by three short sonatas by Domenico Scarlatti. The first part of the program will close with Chopin's impressive B minor sonata.

After the intermission, Rakhmaninov will play two Skryabin compositions, "Poeme" and "Etude." Then comes one of Medtner's "Fairy Tales," a scherzo by Borodin, a barcarolle by Rubinstein, an etude and a prelude (not otherwise identified) of his own, and Erno von Dohnanyi's "Etude Caprice."

Concert Events Listed At Howard University

Howard University has announced the revised schedule of the annual concert course presented under the sponsorship of the music department. There will be six events in the course, each to take place on a Tuesday evening in Rankin Memorial Chapel.

The artists in the series are Roland Hayes, tenor, January 7; Katherine Bacon, pianist, January 21; Roy W. Tibbs, organist, February 11; James Friskin, pianist February 25; Pauline Chellis, dancer, March 24; Gertrude Martin, violinist, March 31.

Display of Fifty Prints by Mahonri Young at Smithsonian Demonstrates Rare Talent

Kin of Famed Churchman Fine Etcher

Technique Is Free From Any Influence of Foppish Art.

His "Hopi Snake Dance" of Particular Appeal to Washington.

Mahonri Young, whose etchings are being shown at the Smithsonian perhaps had an opportunity to build a reputation as a true American artist more than any other contemporary person.

He is a grandson of the famed Brigham Young, leader of the Mormon Church, and a sense of drama must have been imparted to the artist at an early age as he grew to manhood in Salt Lake City during one of the most interesting periods of American history.

The 50 prints by Mahonri Young, on exhibition in the graphic arts division of the Smithsonian, demonstrate the remarkable abilities of this true American artist.

Young would have been a very poor etcher, indeed, if he had not absorbed enough of the ruggedness of his native mountains so he might produce a rich, lively etched line.

Technique Versatile.

Fortunately, he has, and in addition he has attained the ability of using delicate, persuasive lines, too. There is nothing foppish about his technique; it is either bold and to the point, as in his Rembrandt-like print "Noon," or finely drawn, as in his sketches of dancing girls.

Themes of the prints also include Western scenes near Salt Lake City, the farms and Indians of the middle Western plains, while the leather pushers of the squared ring get their share of attention. In the later series Mahonri Young again shows himself to be a master of etchings.

Most everyone who has toured this country has seen the monument in the famed Temple Square at Salt Lake City, done in bronze by Mahonri Young in honor of the sea gulls which saved the lives of the Mormon pioneers. The artist is also a master of sculpture, his talent being used in revealing the forms of pugilists and Indians. This is a field in which he has led for the past 25 years.

"Hopi Snake Dance."

Of particular interest at the Smithsonian exhibition is the "Hopi Snake Dance." Young has done many drawings and paintings of the Hopis, Navajos and Apaches.

An amazing thing about Mahonri Young is his ability to adopt any medium and convert it to his own purposes so it gains new power and expression. In his prints, for instance, he does not suffer from the timidity of many etchers, but boldly attacks his problem and almost invariably is victorious.

Mr. Young attended the Art Students' League in New York City, later going to Paris for several years. In 1904 he won an honorable mention in the American Art Association. Many honors followed, including a first medal for sculpture at the Olympic games, Los Angeles, in 1932, and the Maynard Prize for portraits at the National Academy of Design in the same year. He is represented in the leading galleries of this country.

The current exhibition has been arranged in compliment to members of the commission of the National Gallery of Art, who are meeting in Washington, and of which the artist is a newly elected member.

A Christmas sale of useful and decorative articles suitable for holiday gifts will be held this week in New York for the benefit of the Art Workers Club for Women, which is maintained for the purpose of giving women artists and models opportunity for associations and mutual benefit.

The exhibition of the work of members of the Arts Club of Washington will open at the club December 22. The paintings exhibited will not all be new work but none of them has been exhibited in the annual or summer exhibitions.

Etchers Show Work At Public Library

Exhibit of Society Will Continue for Month.

Members of the Washington Society of Etchers are holding their second annual show currently at the fine arts division of the Washington Public Library on New York avenue, to continue through the month.

The exhibit has 25 prints, all of them of interest, not merely because they are the product of the efforts of Washington artists, but because they are of quite unusual quality. Of particular interest is the color aquatint by Inez Demonet, "Hope," which has been selected to receive the purchase prize for the exhibition, given by Howe P. Cochran, Washington attorney. The work of Miss Demonet shows distinct ability.

Other etchers who have prints exhibited are Benson B. Moore, Hirst Milhollen, Virginia Parton, R. P. Tolman, J. Himmelheber, Millie L. Briggs, W. N. Geety, C. Allen Sherwin, Edwin Cassedy and Mary Wilson Ball.

Mr. Tolman is president of the society and Mr. Sherwin is secretary. Organized little more than a year ago, the society is showing definite signs of vigorous activity, the current exhibition being an excellent example.

Parisian courtyards and snake dances of the Southwest Indians are to be seen at the Mahonri Young etching exhibition now at the Smithsonian Building, Graphic Arts Division. Washington etchers offer their latest work at the Main Public Library in a group showing. In New York City the fascinating paintings of Max Weber are at the New Art Center.

Jex Describes Mountain Work On Exhibit Here

Landscape Club Executive Tells About Experiences While Painting.

An exhibition of oil paintings by Garnet Jex, Washington artist, opened this week at the Washington Arts Club. The paintings are distinguished by their academic technic as well as their imaginative quality. This artist adheres to the theme of beauty in nature. The pictures are of scenes in and about Washington and the mountains and highlands of West Virginia.

In explaining his exhibition, Mr. Jex said: "In subject matter, I have tried to make this exhibition somewhat different. I have omitted New England and foreign pictures and confined the exhibition either to a strictly local theme, which most of our Washington painters ignore, or subjects in the West Virginia and other Southern mountains.

"In the mountain regions most of the natives knew nothing of painting and had never seen a picture being made. When they found out we were minding our own business and not "snooping," they became more friendly. Some of them were curious to see how we painted the mountain scenes, so familiar to them.

"In the Southern mountains one has to live practically alongside his subject, for there are no hotels or tourists camps. I have been frequenting these mountains to paint for four summers. Generally one or two members of the Lanscape Club accompany me. We take one or two automobiles, live in a tent and do our own cooking over an open fire. We have often camped from 3,000 to nearly 5,000 feet up, where even midsummer nights are cold and warm sleeping bags are needed. But the air is delicious and there are almost no mosquitoes or other insect pests that so annoy the campers in the North."

Mr. Jex is vice president of the Landscape Club of Washington, a member of the Washington Society of Artists and of the staff of the Nature Magazine.

A unique venture in the world of art is that being participated in by the Limited Editions Club of New York City. The club is publishing a portfolio of reproductions of several artists, including Denis Tegetmeier, etcher; John Austen, Sylvain Sauvage and Edward Wilson, water colorists; Edward Steichen, photographer, and Barnett Freedman, lithographer, as a part of their activities in producing the noteworthy Limited Editions series, now in its seventh year.

Some 50 miniatures, the work of members of the American Society of Miniature Painters, is now on exhibition at the National Gallery of Art. The collection was selected from the society's annual exhibition recently held in New York City and includes work by the leading miniaturists of this country. The exhibition is of particular interest since a collection has been initiated for the National Gallery from income on a small endowment.

The historic castle of La Mota in Medina del Campo, Spain, where Juana, the mad queen, once was imprisoned, is to be converted into a museum for Spanish-American art, it is announced. It was built in the fifteenth century and once was the finest example of Mudejar military art in Spain.

Max Weber Exhibition Shows Painter Has Gained in Power

By Alice Graeme.

New York City.—The art of Max Weber has gone through many stages and developments, and his style and power have grown with each of the periods through which his work has progressed, judging from his current show at the new art circle. For Weber is a profound student, and he has spent long periods of his life in study and in absorbing various schools of art, and in sifting their knowledge and applying it in turn to his own necessities and the problems of his own expression. The heritage of his native Russian ikons and churches, which he learned to know and to love as a child, have given him a background of color and primitive tradition which is rich and deep.

Weber has not had a one-man show for several years, and it is with the greatest interest that the public now turns to see what new development his art has reached. The exhibition of 12 or more of his oils which has just opened at the New Art Circle Gallery is of work done during the last year and this.

Through his admiration of such men as Piero della Francesca, Weber has felt a tremendously sympathetic response to their impersonal and grand manner of special relations. In all of his work there is a definite quality of the discipline of an exacting design that has been planned to carry out and convey in the most powerful form a deeply felt emotion. Though Weber is not known to have executed any mural commissions one feels strongly that because of this quality his art would have a particularly excellence on a large scale.

"The Rabbis," painted in a much lighter key, but with an exquisite play of delicate oriental colors, is composed in almost austere geometric rhythm. There is lemon yellow, a remarkable violet blue and the fine rich grey which Weber uses with such success. One thinks of Bracque and the magnificent abstract forms which grow like great strange flowers blossoming from his canvas. The composition and the colors seem to have marked Bracque influence, but only Weber could have painted the three Rabbis. The faces are amazing portraiture, powerfully felt, and the whole thing has a reality and nearness to life that commands attention.

The exhibition leaves one with the feeling that Weber has again proved his great mastery of color and his magnificent draftsmanship. His position in the development of modern painting certainly is an interesting one, and the height of his renown has by no means reached its peak. From the primitive and rich tradition of his race, from his sensitive searching in the thought of both modern and ancient painters, and from the depth of his sincere feeling and the schooling of his hand, there comes a fusion in Weber that makes him a significant painter of his time.

An exhibition of antique, semi-antique and modern Oriental rugs is in progress at the Maryland Institute in Baltimore. Lectures will be given each day by Harry Kachadourian who made the collection.

. . . Camera

Conducted by Rho.

A good many news photographers, particularly the ones in the top register of newsdom, were amateurs in camera work before they turned to this interesting occupation.

There is, perhaps, no more exciting occupation than that of a news photographer, though most of those now on newspaper photographic staffs take their work as a matter of course. But it would be very difficult to get a newspaper cameraman to give up his job and take to the easy life of more ordinary activities.

Despite what the general opinion may be, it isn't hopelessly difficult to get into newspaper work, provided you have the background and the will to get ahead in this fascinating though restricted game.

If you are interested, a study of the informative book, "News Photography," by Jack Price, noted photographer of New York City for years, will help much to clarify the situation.

For some 25 years Price was an ace news photographer of metropolitan journalism, and his newly published book is something the photographer should have if he has a serious attitude toward his work, whether it be professional or amateur.

Author Was Canny With the Camera.

Jack Price is a canny photographer, and you can get a lot of worthwhile information from his book. Many books, almost too many, have been published going over the same old ground about printing and developing. But this is a book that is fascinating, and highly informative. You wouldn't want to rush right down to the newspaper and ask for a berth on the photographic staff after you've finished reading it, but if you do, you'll know considerable about the news game, in fact more than many photographers already do who manage to make a living with their lens and speed-guns.

One point the book doesn't mention but indicates by content is the fact that the greatest subject of the camera is the human being rather than buildings, which may or may not be architecturally beautiful, or woodland scenes populated by contented cows and sheep. People are interested in people and everything associated with them, hence, if you want to make money from the newspapers and magazines, you must photograph people and be smart about it.

Zeiss Applauded For Exhibit Here.

If you didn't see the Zeiss exhibit last week at the Washington Hotel you missed something very worthwhile. Standing room was at a premium in the exhibition room during the three days the show was here, from the opening hour to closing time.

The exhibit comprised the best of photographs taken recently with Zeiss equipment in the fields of amateur, commercial, newspaper, theatrical and scientific work. Carl Zeiss, Inc., is to be congratulated for its excellent show.

Members of the enterprising Clay Club of New York City are now holding their ninth annual exhibition of sculpture, at the club gallery, 4 West Eighth street, New York City. It will continue through December.

Paintings by Alice Judson are being shown at the Fifteen Gallery, 37 West Fifty-seventh street, New York City. Many are of the New England fishing villages.

Leighton's 'Four Hedges' and Vassos' 'Humanities' Applauded

Choice Selections of Critic From Holiday Crop of Art Books.

By Harold Rhodenbaugh.

Art books we have with us every holiday season and each year we cabbage onto the new ones with increasing delight. Once in a blue moon the crop of art books is rather slim, which has been particularly true since the great fall of Mammon, but this season finds us with several choice volumes.

Taking particular precedence this time is the very well gotten up "Four Hedges," with a subtitle "A Gardener's Chronicle," by the English artist, Clare Leighton, illustrated with 88 wood cuts by the author. Macmillian is the publisher.

Ah, but this is a book which will delight your heart right from the gay blue-green cover to the last page. It is the first garden book of many, many years. Leighton is a master of the woodcut and this book adds another to the worthy list she has illustrated both for herself and for other authors. Her past exploits include illustrations for the writing of Thomas Hardy and Thornton Wilder, also her own book, "The Farmer's Year," in addition to other books of her own.

Around the Calendar.

It is a pleasant sensation to see the work of such an artist as Miss Leighton, and it is a major event when the discovery is made for the first time that she writes as well as she uses the burin. In this particular volume the reader is taken through the months of the year as they are chronicled by the event transpiring in the garden watched with zealous care by Miss Leighton. One soon becomes enraptured with the "news events" taking place in the lives of the plants, birds and other residents of this interesting spot.

It translates from imagination into the realm of reality the fascinating events in the lives of Cornelius the hedgehog; Old Nellie, the big, hoary goat; the multitudinous insects and the worms and the grasshoppers.

One follows the turns of the seasons with renewed interest, happy in the rediscovery of something long lost sight of in the workaday world of the city.

Needless to say, Miss Leighton's reputation as a writer-artist is firmly established. She needs but little introduction and once you get one of her books you will never stop until you have them all in a row on your library shelf.

"Humanities" Arresting.

One now turns the attention to a different kind of a book, an arresting volume of drawings which preach an enlarged viewpoint on the social structure of life. This is the strikingly illustrated volume by John and Ruth Vassos, "Humanities," newly published by Dutton.

A few thousand years ago man was wont to express his creeds and beliefs by painfully carving words and pictures into enduring stone so all might see. Today an artist has a tremendous opportunity to express his beliefs and to afford the multitudes an opportunity to grasp them, particularly since people are increasingly picture-conscious.

Hence the success John Vassos has had in the past in producing his fantastically illustrated books, such as Contempo," "Ballad of Reading Gaol," "Ultimo," "Phobia," and others.

Works by Master of the Woodcut Recommended to City Readers.

While most of Vassos' books have been beautifully fantastic, this volume, "Humanities," reveals a biting satirical and caustic insight into the baser ways of man. His startlingly realistic pictures grip the mind with their message.

Pictures Speak Loudly.

It is the creed of the artist, Vassos, and his wife, Ruth, who wrote the carefully phrased word pictures that accompany the illustrations. He uses the language of pictures in a very forceful manner to convey in his startling, symbolic technique his thoughts on the problems of the day, based on the oft quoted phrase: "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn" of Robert Burns. The titles of the panels give an inkling of their expressive pictorial eloquence: "Nationalism, Justice, Ethics, The Leaders, etc."

It is not a pretty book, despite its bright red and blue color. Its pictures pack too powerful a punch for that. But it does carry a message. It will make you think and each time you again pick up the book you will see more clearly the vast truths contained in Vassos' powerful drawings.

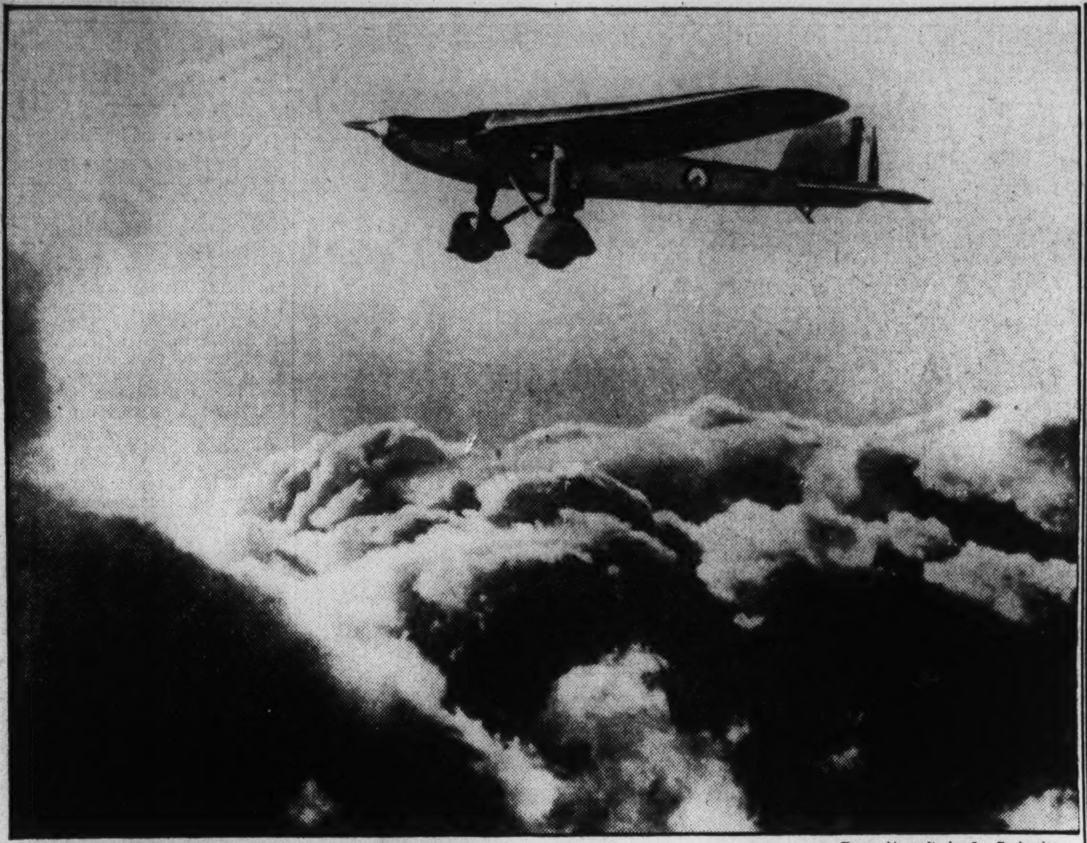
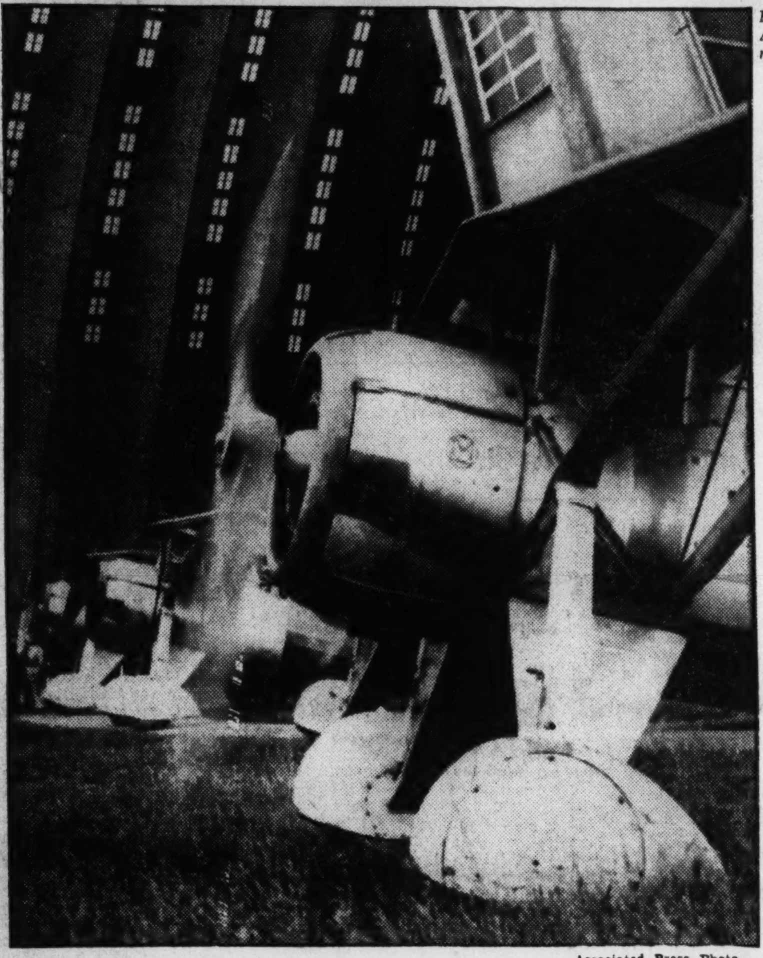
Eyes of the World Turn Toward the Air as Powers Develop Mighty Flying Fortresses



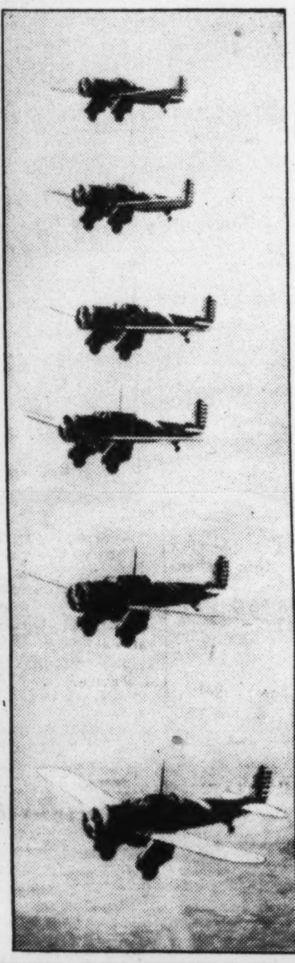
From Aircraft, by Le Corbusier.

Built to the order of the British Air Ministry, this Fairey long-range monoplane is used principally for long-distance flying.



Associated Press Photo.

France today holds more flying records than any other single nation. Recently her engineers finished a 37-ton flying boat. Here are French combat planes ready for the take-off for maneuvers at Orly, near Paris.



Bleriot's Aerial 'Dove' Now Soars as a Hawk Over the World

By Harris B. Hull.

When Louis Bleriot flew across the English Channel in July of 1909 a Frenchman by the name of Auguste Perret was heard to say that at last he had seen a dove of peace.

"There are no longer any frontiers. Thus wars are now impossible," he reasoned.

Today as Europe teeters on the brink of war men wonder at Monsieur Perret's remarks. The early plane that he saw, his dove, has become only a museum piece.

Since Bleriot's frail little ship fought its way over the channel to the Dover hillside a long line of aviation pioneers has come down through the years, each one adding a few miles an hour to the early airplane and making it a little larger.

Today as the diplomats at 10 Downing Street, on the Quai D'Orsay, at the State Department and in many other foreign capitals argue for peace, but prepare for war; as they ponder over the use of sanctions against Italy, in the back of their minds they are wondering what part the airplane may play in actual conflict.

As their thoughts turn toward Italy they recall the feats of two great Italian aviators. One is Agello, the other Balbo.

Francesco Agello piloted his plane 440 miles an hour last year. And Balbo led the great squadron of Italian seaplanes that flew the Atlantic two years ago to see the World's Fair in Chicago and to show foreign powers Il Duce's strength in the air.

Yet strangely enough, neither Agello's record-holding plane nor Balbo's great seaplanes are able to play any important part in the aerial tactics of the Italian high command.

Agello's ship is a fleet racer requiring long stretches of calm water for the take-off and capable of only a short flight. Balbo's planes were built for flying over water. But the planes that are flown into Ethiopia must be land-type ships.

The thought of Ethiopia's air force usually calls for a smile. Yet Selassie's little fleet of planes is playing a more important part than the Italians would like you to believe.

Recognizing that it is fruitless to attempt aerial combat with the heavily armed Italian ships, the King of Kings has employed his ships to fulfill one very important military mission, for transport. Back and forth from Addis Ababa to the front they carry officials, supplies, small parcels of munition, and medicines.

Meanwhile the British push ahead a rapid construction program to build up their flying squadrons. New men are being enlisted to become pilots, larger and faster ships are rolling out of the factories. Her great aircraft carriers now are ready to swing into action, should the order be given.

And at the asme time France, the United States and other powers push ahead with commercial and military aviation plans, building planes and training pilots for the further development of the commercial systems, but always ready for defense should the emergency arise.

Today the eyes of the world are turned toward the air.

The dove of peace Monsieur Perret saw has changed. It has become a hawk.

The Ethiopian air force is not important from a military viewpoint. But Selassie's planes are playing a role as transports.

Commander of 121st Engineers and of District National Guard Awarded 35-Year Medal

140 D. C. Reserve Officers To Remain on CCC Duty

Additional Eligibles in Washington Will Be Called to Assignments Under Adjustments Now Being Worked Out by War Department.

By A. S. De Agro.

Machinery to adjust the strength of the Civilian Conservation Corps was set in motion by the War Department last week. Orders were forwarded to all Corps Area commanders advising them of the change in CCC strength, and directing that steps be taken at once to enroll sufficient men in January to permit the corps to begin the new year with the new authorized strength of 428,000.

The new strength will not only permit the retention of the present 140 reserve officers from the District of Columbia on active duty with the CCC camps, but will permit the detail of additional eligible reserve officers to this important duty.

District officers ordered last week by the Third Corps Headquarters included First Lieuts. John B. Naughton, of 1215 Shepherd street northwest, and Lawrence S. Carson, of 2112 O street northwest. The officers were placed on active duty for six months and ordered to report direct to the camps assigned. Lieut. Naughton will take station at Trester Valley, Miffin County, Pa., and Lieut. Carson at Chatham, Pittsylvania County, Va.

Williams' Duty Extended.

Maj. Alfred A. Williams, Engineers, of 2101 Sixteenth street, was given another six months of active duty with the CCC and redetailed as subdistrict commander of the camps located in the vicinity of Washington. Other officers of the District ordered to be continued on active duty include First Lieuts. Henry C. Kerlin, of the Field Artillery, and Ralph B. Hanahan, of the Medical Corps.

Robert Fechner, director of the emergency conservation work, stated that the strength of the Civilian Conservation Corps has been set at 428,000 enrolled men for the quarter beginning January 1. This figure represents a reduction of 72,000 men below the present authorized strength.

The readjustment in the maximum strength of the CCC will be effected gradually by following the policy of not replacing enrollees who drop out of the corps until the strength falls below 428,000 men. It was stated that the reduction will not make it necessary to discharge any junior or war veteran who desires to remain in the corps as the discharge rate is sufficient to reduce the strength gradually to the desired limits. The reduction is part of the general program which calls for reduction of the CCC to 300,000 men by July 1. When the CCC is at 428,000 it will be made up of 389,000 juniors and 39,000 war veterans.

Chapter Adopts Constitution.

The autumn meeting of the District of Columbia Department, Reserve Officers Association of the United States, was held in the auditorium of the Interior Department Building Monday. The principal business transacted was the adoption of a constitution and by-laws. The draft submitted for consideration of the members of the chapter had been prepared at previous department council meetings. Plans for the coming months were discussed and a committee was appointed for an entertainment or dance.

The address was made by Maj. Nelson M. Walker, of the War Department general staff, who described the maneuvers held at and near Pine Camp, N. Y., during the month of August, in a most interesting and instructive lecture.

The District of Columbia Chapter is headed by Maj. John Caswell, jr., Coast Artillery Reserve, of 815 Fifteenth street northwest, president; First Lieut. David E. McRae, Quartermaster Reserve, of 226 Adams street northeast, secretary, and Capt. Carson M. Brorror, Engineers Reserve, of 4831 Thirty-sixth street northwest, treasurer.

Duty Given Reserves.

Maj. Robert C. Jones, Adjutant General's Department Reserve, was ordered last week to active duty for 14 days at headquarters, Baltimore, and the following Infantry officers ordered for a like period of training to Fort Washington, Md., Capt. Arval L. Anderson and Second Lieuts. Samuel W. Marsh and Hershel A. Soskin.

The following Washington officers were relieved from assignment to units of the Organized Reserves: From the Forty-sixth Ordnance Company, Second Lieut. Robert C. Riordan; 538th Ordnance Company, Second Lieuts. Earle F. Hiscock and Daniel F. Mitchell, and from the 654th Ordnance Company, Second Lieut. Frank Hargrove, jr.

Reserve Corps Conferences.

Maj. Gen. William H. Tschappat, the chief of ordnance, will head the list of speakers at reserve conferences this week. Gen. Tschappat will lecture at the ordnance conference scheduled for Thursday evening on "The Early History of the Ornance Department."

Quartermaster officers will meet tomorrow evening under the direction of Maj. W. H. Sadler, who will discuss the "Movements of an Infantry Division by Rail."

Maj. Francis M. Brady, of the Air Corps, recently returned to duty in Washington from assignment as military attache for air at the American Embassy, Rome, Italy, will lecture the officers of the Air Corps group Tuesday evening. The meeting will be held in the Air Corps projection room of the office of the chief of the Air Corps. Coast Artillery officers will meet the same evening in the local headquarters assembly rooms.

The military intelligence group will meet Wednesday evening, the officers of 315th Artillery Thursday evening, and officers of the District Engineers Reserve units Friday evening.

Efficiency Level Of 5th Battalion Pushed Higher

Recent Orders of General on Correspondence Work Indicates Trend.

That the Fifth Battalion, Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, is expected to maintain efficiency of both officers and men on a parity with the regular Marine Corps is indicated in recent orders received from the major general commandant directing certain assigned correspondence courses for officers and men.

In order to be promoted to any non-commissioned rank Marine Reservists of the Fifth Battalion, irrespective of their general performance, length of service or general fitness, must complete certain assigned correspondence courses.

In the case of commissioned officers satisfactory completion of correspondence-course lessons, monthly, is necessary for the officers' retention in the Fifth Battalion.

Laggards Reassigned.

Officers who fail to keep pace in correspondence courses in the subjects assigned them will be separated from the battalion and transferred to an inactive status in the Eastern Reserve Area.

All lessons are routed to the Marine Corps schools at Quantico after first having been registered with Maj. Lewis B. Reagan, U. S. M. C., inspector-instructor of the Fifth Battalion.

Commenting upon the stringent requirements in correspondence courses, Maj. Harvey L. Miller, commanding the Fifth Batalion, said yesterday: "The Fifth Battalion has reached a stage of development where advanced military education is essential to the carrying out of the training assigned us. In the 1936 training camp at Quantico next July the schedule of field training will consist of maneuvers so far advanced that any officer or non-commissioned officer expecting to 'get by' the board of observers will have to be well fortified with correspondence courses between now and the field training period."

Last week's formation of the Fifth Battalion on Tuesday night was the first time in which the battalion turned out in its new field overcoats.

Recruits between the ages of 17 and 35, with or without previous military training, are needed in Companies A and B. Applications for enrollment in the battalion should be submitted on any Tuesday or Wednesday night at 458 Indiana avenue northwest to First Lieut. John M. Augustine for Company A and to First Lieut. Wilfred J. Serpas for Company B. There are also several vacancies in the battalion band under First Lieut. Leon Brusiloff.

Corpl. Harry L. Hanlein rejoined Company B from the Eastern Reserve area.

Navy's Recreation Cost Put at $250,000 in 1935

A total of $250,000 was spent by the Navy in the fiscal year of 1935 for the "welfare and recreation of its men ashore and afloat."

A report by Rear Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, said that $165,000 of this sum was distributed on a per-capita basis for recreation, amusement, comfort and health of the personnel.

The $85,000 remaining was part of a total of $323,280 expended for leasing motion pictures.

Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, head of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, stressed the need for a new model testing basin in his annual report to Secretary Swanson. The proposed site for the new basin is near Cabin John Bridge on Conduit road.

Navy Awaiting Fleet of Planes For Scout Duty

135 New Fighters of Skies Will Be Built by Buffalo Company.

The Navy is getting a new fleet of scout observation planes.

Acceptance tests and other formalities having been completed, delivery of the new ships will be made as rapidly as they are finished.

A total of 135 of the new fighters will be built at a cost of $2,752,705. Designated as the SOC-1, the new type plane is designed for service with the battleships and cruisers of the fleet. The Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Co., in Buffalo, N. Y., holds the contract, which must be filled by July 1.

The SOC-1 type airplane is the result of a design competition held by the Navy Department. In these ships are incorporated many features which represent marked advances in design over airplanes previously manufactured for this type of service.

The cockpits are inclosed by a new type of cabin inclosure which afforts a greater degree of protection to the crew than heretofore attained while at the same time vision, so important in scouting and observation work, is maintained. Protection of pilot and observer by cockpit inclosures is now a standard requirement because of the resulting decrease in fatigue during prolonged flights.

External of Fabric.

Internal construction of both fuselage and wings is all metal, though external covering of both is fabric.

Designed primarily as a seaplane for catapulting from ships at sea, wheel type landing gear is also provided for use during training operations ashore.

The full automatic wing slots make the plane practically spin-proof. This adds considerably to the safety of the airplane's crew when flying under adverse weather conditions, and the steep gliding angle permits landing in the high seas with less danger than formerly.

Navy Assigns Observers For Army Air Maneuvers

The acting chief of naval operations, Rear Admiral Joseph K. Taussig, U. S. N., announced last week that the invitation of Gen. Malin Craig, U. S. A., chief of staff, for naval observers to attend the general headquarters air force maneuvers of the Army, had been accepted. Five naval officers took off last week to witness the maneuvers, which are in progress in the vicinity of Miami, Fla.

Lieut. Comdr. William D. Sample, U. S. N., and Lieut. John B. Moss, U S. N, on duty in the Bureau of Aeronautics, are serving as observers, with the officers from the naval station, Pensacola, Fla., and Lieut. A. K. Morehouse, U. S. N., in charge of the Naval Reserve aviation base, Opa-Locka, Fla.

Air Commerce Officials Approve "Aerial Coupe"

Officials of the Bureau of Air Commerce said last week that they had provisionally accepted the new type all-metal monoplane submitted for private owner use.

The little Curtiss-Wright Aerial Coupe has been tested by Eugene Vidal, chief of the bureau, and other department pilots, who report that it performs up to specifications. The ship will be used as a part of the bureau's effort to develop a low-cost plane whose safe operation can be quickly learned.

Line Orders 10 Transports.

Announcement by American Airlines, Inc., of an order for a fleet of the largest transport planes ever operated on a domestic air line climaxes a $4,500,000 re-equipment program instituted by the company over a period of two years, C. R. Smith, president of the line, said recently.

The new order, Smith said, has been placed with the Douglas Aircraft Co. and calls for delivery of ten new-type Douglas DST transport planes.

Fare by Air Cut Below De Luxe Railroad Rates

United Lines Now Offering Less Than Rail—Plus Pullman Tariff.

Because of the establishment of new low rates with connecting air lines out of Washington, United Air Lines is now offering a less than rail, plus Pullman rate, Washington to Chicago. Reductions are also in effect between Washington and intermediate and West Coast points.

The air lines affected by these rate changes are Central, Pennsylvania, T. W. A., and United Air Lines.

Shortly after the first of the year, with the inauguration of the air line scrip, a further reduction of 15 per cent will be granted to the users of this new plan, and this the air lines believe will keep the available planes filled at all times.

Winter Totals Rising.

Because of the modern equipment and many new comfort features developed within recent years, winter travel by air has increased steadily so that at the present time most operators are flying schedules comparable in number to the summer schedules.

W. J. Austin, vice president of Pennsylvania Airlines, said that the new rates in effect on the Washington, Pittsburgh, Akron, Cleveland and Detroit line would be lower or about the same as rail and Pullman rates.

Under the new rates the fare between Pittsburgh and Washington, formerly $16, is reduced to $10.75, which is $3.90 less than rail plus Pullman.

The new Cleveland to Washington fare is $17.75 while the rail and Pullman fare is $20.13. Between Detroit and Washington the rail and Pullman fare exceeds the new air fare of $25.65 by $2.28. The Washington to Chicago rate is 3 cents less than rail plus Pullman.

Commuters Benefit.

At the same time Paul Brattain, general traffic manager of Eastern Air Lines, announced a 15 per cent reduction under the established one-way fares and 5 per cent under round-trip fares for all holders of $500 and $1,000 Eastern Air Lines commutation agreements.

Stamp Valuers Increasingly Prize Two Issues Commemorating Graf Zeppelin Flights

Big Argentine Collection Shown at Club Meeting

Members and Guests of Branch No. 5, S. P. A., Are Treated to Display of James A. Duhamel's Stamps; Merwin R. Thurber Speaks About Albums.

The meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., at the Thomson School Tuesday evening was largely attended. The features were an exhibition, an instructive address and an auction. Over a hundred members and guests were present.

President F. A. Bickert presided and conducted a short business session. Among the guests was Georges Creed, of Philadelphia, who is a member of the club. Mr. Creed always displays many fine stamps.

Merwin R. Thurber, of Takoma Park, was the speaker of the evening. He has perfected a new idea in stamp albums of the loose sheet variety and with the aid of a drawing board enables the collector to make a layout of his stamps both attactive and individualistic. He displayed a number of the pages of his own album and suggested many new ideas in the general make-up of a stamp page. His talk was illustrated by several frames of album pages all drawn unusually attractively. The flexibility of the new way of arranging an album as illustrated by Mr. Thurber was apparent to all who heard his address.

During the evening James A. Duhamel, the senior member of the club, displayed his large collection of stamps of the Argentine Republic and spoke on the various varieties. Mr. Duhamel has been collecting stamps for many years and has probably the largest collection of any Washington philatelist. He arranged his Argentine stamps in an attractive manner, and through the aid of the club's frames and tables it is possible for all to inspect the stamps at close range. This is a most worthy feature of the weekly meeting.

War Stamps Shown.

Another feature of the meeting was a large volume from the collection of Olaf Nagel, of Chicago, showing stamps carried by the submarine Deutschland during the World War. The album contained many special German stamps and covers that were sent to the United States on the famous submarine that arrived at Baltimore on July 10, 1916, under the command of Capt. Koenig. The covers and the many clippings of explanation proved intensively interesting and were closely examined by the members.

The regular monthly auction is scheduled for Dec. 17, but a preliminary auction was held during the meeting, many good lots of both United States and foreign stamps being disposed of. W. E. Kingswell, the auctioneer, assisted by Mr. Bickert, has secured many unusual stamps for his sales and this feature of the club's work was favorably commented on by Georges Creed, who is the auction manager of the Society of Philatelic Americans.

The stamps for this week's sale were inspected by many of those present, the custom being to have all lots entered early to allow for personal inspection prior to the sale.

The sales circuits of both Manager Hoppe and Galloway are very active at this time in spite of the holiday season. There is a big demand for United States stamps as well as British colonials and the foreign stamps of the nineteenth century seem to have the call. For hours at every meeting the members and friends inspect the circuit books. The call for stamps is always the watchword for club meetings.

Society to Celebrate.

The quarterly business meeting of the Washington Philatelic Society was held Wednesday evening at the Carlton, Dr. Ellis Haworth presiding.

An amendment to the constitution was adopted providing for the nomination and election of officers. In the future the officers will be elected by ballot by a mail vote.

The thirtieth anniversary of the society will be celebrated Wednesday with a banquet at the Carlton. J. O. Peavey is chairman for the affair.

Iceland Issues Century Stamp Of Jochumsson

New Stamps of Four Values Put Out to Observe Birthday of Poet.

Iceland issued on November 11 a commemorative series of four values honoring the centenary of the poet, Mathias Jochumsson. The stamps show a portrait of the poet with date "1835-1935" in a panel at the left and the value at the bottom. The values: 3a green, 5a light gray, 7a yellow green and 35a light blue.

Danzig has another new issue of air-mail stamps. There are five values and two designs the lower values being the same—that of a plane with inscription at the top and value in large figures at the right—while the single high value shows a design upright shaped like a plane with suitable inscriptions. The values: 10pf vermillion, 15pf yellow, 25pf green, 50pf blue and 1G violet.

France issues another commemorative for the 300th anniversary of the death of Jacques Callot. It bears a portrait of Callot as a herald of Lorraine. He was one of the leading engravers of the seventeenth century. The stamp is red-orange and of 75fr value.

Greece issued four overprints on the day King George returned to the throne. The overprints consist of a crown and the date of the plebiscite, "November 3, 1935." On three stamps new values have been surcharged. The 1933 issue is used, the 75 and 100 drachmai being surcharged 15d and 5d, respectively. The 40L postage due is surcharged 50L, and the 3d postage due is unchanged, all of the postage due stamps being allowed for general postage.

Luxembourg has a new 10fr pictorial stamp of green. It shows the famous castle of Vianden and a scene from the Valley of the Our. This stamp has been overprinted "Official" in red.

Rules Explained On Yuletide Cards

Erroneous Information Sent Out About Postage.

Many collectors consistently send mail matter short paid for the sole purpose of obtaining postage-due stamps. Postal regulations call for "no sale" of postage-due stamps, though all collections have plenty of them.

Now that the holiday season is at hand postal officials have called attention to the fact that full postage should be made, as short-paid mail matter during rush seasons causes much unnecessary work.

In a recent report of one of the press associations the statement was made that under the Christmas card mailing regulations such cards could be sent in unsealed envelopes for one cent, provided they bore no writing other than "Sincerely yours," "Merry Christmas," "Happy New Year," and "With Best Wishes," but that the inscription "Love and Kisses" would subject the cards to three-cent postage.

This report is erroneous in two particulars. Printed Christmas cards sent under cover of unsealed envelopes may not be mailed for one-cent, but are subject to postage at the third-class rate of 1½ cents for each two ounces, provided they bear no unpermissible writing. The department advises that the words "Love and Kisses" do not make the cards subject to a higher rate but constitute a permissible inscription not in the nature of personal correspondence.

Charles Hofmann Posts Silver Cup in Virginia

Hofmann, secretary-treasurer of the Virginia Philatelic Federation, has donated a trophy (silver cup) to be awarded through the Richmond Stamp Club to any member of the Richmond Club or any resident of Virginia over 18 years of age participating in the annual exhibition of the club, subject to certain rules and regulations. The award is for the champion exhibit of the annual exhibition.

Rear Admiral C. H. T. Lowndes will speak to the Washington Federation of Junior Stamp Collectors Saturday afternoon at the Red Cross Building.

A delegation of Washington collectors attended the auction sales of Perry W. Fuller at the rooms of Gatlon Orsburn Co., Inc., 323 Park avenue, Baltimore, on Friday and Saturday.

Owing to the holiday season there will be no meetings of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., December 24 and December 31, nor of the Washington Philatelic Society December 25 or January 1.

Regarding the so-called discrepancies said to exist in the seal used for the design of the 3-cent Michigan commemorative stamp, Henry A. Perry, program director of the Michigan Centennial Celebration, says: "There is nothing more than technical differences, for variant designs are in use even in some State departments. State officials aren't worried."

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

The speculative postage stamp has been so named because of the view taken by the collector. It will be recalled that when the first United States commemorative issue of stamps (the Columbian series) appeared in 1893 many philatelists, as well as a few dealers, objected saying they were issued chiefly for sale to stamp collectors.

It may also be remembered that postoffice officials were much disappointed in the total sales of this issue. However, the stamps proved exceptionally popular and today command a high price for both used and unused sets when originally the face value was only $16.34.

Arguments are still heard, here and abroad, regarding "speculative stamps." The imperforate sheet issue of last March 15 as well as the silver jubilee stamps of the British Empire are called speculative by many collectors, although the demand increases for all these varieties.

Hence it would seem that stamp collectors recognize these varieties together with every other issue. Every collector should know that in many countries stamps have been issued primarily to sell to the collector. This method of issuing stamps is not considered by the serious collector, perhaps, but as long as countries issue such stamps they will be recognized as material for any collection.

The large number of air mail stamps recently issued by Italy and her colonies were of many high values. That such stamps could not possibly be used for regular postage was accepted as an indisputable argument, yet the stamps were issued frequently and sold all over the world. So much was said about these varieties that the Italian government was memoralized and dealers refused to handle such issues for the simple reason they considered them speculative stamps not for legitimate postal use. The Italian government finally took cognizance of these protests.

Stamps should be issued when necessary. The custom of issuing the commemorative is generally accepted as a worthy plan. Recent years have produced many beautiful stamps, but more important is the fact that the commemorative stamp has been postally used and is being so used even now.

That all commemorative stamps are speculative is not a true statement nor can it be said that every issue placed on sale either at postoffice or philatelic agency is for investment or speculative purposes.

50-Center Put Out in '33 Already Brings $1, Mint

Importance of Series Perceived When Postoffice Department Publishes Figures Showing That Total of Sales Was Only 324,070.

The 50-cent Graf Zeppelin airmail stamp, issued in 1933 to commemorate the flight of the dirigible from Germany to the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago, promises to be one of the rare stamps of the United States. Already the stamp is being sold for $1, mint, and in pairs and blocks at a still larger single price. Dealers as well as collectors are quoted as saying that the price will greatly advance in another six months.

The history of this stamp is interesting, and now that the Postoffice Department has made public the figures of total sales of only 324,070 stamps the importance of the issue can readily be seen.

Design by McCloskey.

The model for the 50-cent Zeppelin was approved September 19, 1933. The designer was Victor S. McCloskey. The engravers were, for the pictures, J. C. Benzing and for the lettering E. M. Hall and W. B. Wells. The plates used in printing were numbered: 21,171, 21,172, 21,177 and 21,178. The first order sent to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing called for 5,000,000 stamps. The stamp was printed by flat press, unwatermarked, perforated 11 in green.

The Graf Zeppelin left Friederichshafen, Germany, October 14, 1933.

The first-day sale of the stamp was on October 2 at New York City. Approximately 3,500 first day covers were canceled, 88,942 stamps sold and 14,627 covers received for the flight.

Akron Sold 10,923.

First day sale in Akron, Ohio, was on October 4. The number of covers handled totaled 15,595, and the stamps sold numbered 10,923.

First day sale in Miami, Fla., was on October 6. The number of covers handled was 14,417 and stamps sold totaled 11,589.

First day sale in Chicago was on October 7. The number of covers handled totaled 19,724 and stamps sold 34,854.

Official figures given in the final account showed that there were 4,302,950 stamps issued and 3,978,880 redeemed, leaving a total of 324,070 stamps actually sold.

The stamp was removed from the sales list at the Philatelic Agency on June 15, 1935.

* * * *

The Graf Zeppelin issue of 1930 is likewise becoming a good stamp as far as price is concerned. This issue was of three stamps for mail carried on the Graf Zeppelin on its flight from Germany via Spain and South America. The stamps were placed on first day sale on April 19, 1930, in Washington and on April 21, 1930, on first day sale in a hundred selected cities.

The three values were: 65-cent green showing the Zeppelin over the ocean; $1.30 brown depicts the Zeppelin between the continents; and the $2.60 blue shows the Graf over the globe. The $2.60 stamp was used for postage on ordinary mail from the United States to Germany and return, viz, by steamer from New York to Germany and then by the Graf Zeppelin via Spain and Brazil, returning to Lakehurst. The $1.30 stamp was for a post card for the same trip, as well as the rate for a letter carried on the last leg of the journey from New York to either Seville or Friederichshafen. The 65-cent stamp was the rate for a post card for the last leg of the journey.

The total issue of these stamps: 65-cent value, 93,536; $1.30 value, 72,428, and $2.60 value, 61,296. Dealers are quoting this set at greatly advanced prices.

The large number of varieties of common United States postage stamps give pleasure, possibly profit, to many collectors. Not that such stamps are issued mainly for sale to collectors.

Such statements are absurd. The investment as well as the speculative feature of stamp collecting are entirely different; neither need enter into the life of the stamp collector or the philatelist.

Hind Collection Sold at London For £180,000

Twenty Items Alone Taken From Utica Portfolio Yield £35,725.

Twenty items in the collection of the late Arthur Hind, of Utica, N. Y., as reported by H. R. Harmer, the London auctioneer, brought 35,725 pounds. The total sales yielded 180,000 pounds.

The items follow:

New South Wales — December, 1852, 3d, dull yellow green, mint part of a sheet of 38, creased, 1,425 pounds; May, 1853, 8d, orange yellow, mint block of six, 1,150 pounds.

Germany, Oldenberg—1859, one-third gr., on green, a unique mint block of 12 (4x3), 1,300 pounds.

Rumania—1858, 27 par., used vertical tete-beche pair, 1,000 pounds.

Hawaiian Islands—1851-52 "Missionary," 2c, blue, type 1, repaired, 1,500 pounds; 1851-52, "Missionary," 2c, blue, type 2, repaired, 2,050 pounds.

L. A. Herman, of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., has an unusually interesting item. It is a variety of the 1916 issue of war tax stamps of Jamaica. This issue of the regular issue of 1906 was surcharged "War Stamp." On many of the stamps varieties have been found and catalogued, mostly being inverts, letter left out, period not used or double surcharge.

Mr. Herman has a pair of the 3p violet No. 306. On one of the stamps in the surcharge "Stamp" instead of the "T" being used there is a letter "L" used upside-down. This error apparently is not listed.

The Federal Diary

Registered
U. S. Patent Office

By Morgan Baker

THIS week, in Chicago, a convention of civilian employes of States, counties and municipalities will get under way showing every indication of making history on the following points:

BAKER.

1. It will mark an aggressive step toward the establishment of a merit or civil service system in every State, county and municipality where spoilsmanship is generally rampant with attendant inefficiency and waste of money.
2. It will formally mark the opening of a Nation-wide drive by the American Federation of Labor to enroll a vast army of public service employes — "white collar" workers—in the trades union movement, through the American Federation of Government Employes.
3. Congress, legislatures and city councils will be confronted with a lobby of organized public service employes with a backing as potentially powerful as the veterans.

The A. F. G. E. gives as the purpose of the convention "unity among Government employes, whether they work for the national Government or for States, cities or counties."

Delegates present will include representatives of at least two State federations and of 30 or more groups of city and county employes, ranging all the way from Atlantic City to Long Branch, Calif. With them will meet E. Claude Babcock, president; Cecil E. Custer, treasurer, and David R. Glass, charter president, all of the A. F. G. E. under whose banner the local workers will march henceforth.

Federal Charters Used.

Most of the State, county and city groups which will have delegates at the convention have been operating under Federal charters granted by the American Federation of Labor, since until the recent convention of the A. F. G. E. in Cincinnati there was no international union which could exercise jurisdiction over these groups.

The American Federation of Labor gave jurisdiction to the A. F. G. E in 1934, but the convention of the latter organization had already been held at the time, and a change in its constitution was necessary to permit it to receive the affiliation of these groups. This change was effected at the A. F. G. E. convention in Cincinnati last September, and the way was thus opened for a union of all types of Government workers in one organization—barring of course, the claims of other A. F. of L. unions.

The question of jurisdiction enters here—the same question involved in the present controversy as to the merits of craft versus industrial unionism. For example, all craftsmen in the Government service or elsewhere are supposed to belong to the union of their crafts, unless jurisdiction over them is specifically waived. An electrician is expected to belong to the Electrical Workers Union, and a carpenter to the Carpenters Union. Thus, while the A. F. G. E. is a general federation, it is not a universal organization of Government workers.

Group Jurisdictions.

Moreover, certain groups of Government employes engaged in similar tasks, have their own unions, which have jurisdiction so far as these employes are concerned. These groups are the National Association of Letter Carriers, the Railway Mail Association, and the National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

In many respects, the postal service is set off from the rest of the employes of the national Government; for one thing, postal employes make up nearly half the total in normal times and about a third at present. Again, they are all employed in the same Government department, where they have only one set of regulations to deal with, instead of the multiplicity that one finds among nine other executive departments and a host of independent agencies. Finally because of their longer experience in labor organization, they have a substantially higher pay scale than is the rule among Government employes generally.

Thus, the American Federation of Government Employes, though it organizes workers in all governmental agencies, including the Postoffice Department, does not organize craftsmen, or postal employes. A few other groups are likewise outside its jurisdiction—draftsmen, as an example—and some substantial groups of State, county and municipal employes will also be outside the jurisdiction of the A. F. G. E., though these groups are not included in any to be present at the Chicago convention this week.

City Firemen Outside.

Most notable of these are the city firemen and the school teachers, who are organized respectively in the International Association of Fire Fighters and the American Federation of Teachers. There are a few locals of policemen, but no national or international organization.

The fire fighters are a substantial and active group, with many locals throughout the country. Naturally, they are interested in general organization of city workers, since they have much the same problems with which to deal, and since they must present these problems to the same groups of officials.

The American Federation of Teachers is a smaller organization, though potentially its field is great. Recently it has encountered internal dissensions, and there has been a tendency toward dual unionism on the part of a dissenting group. However, since teachers have an international charter from the American Federation of Labor, they cannot be organized under the A. F. G. E.

Enlargement Extensive.

The enlargement of the field of the A. F. G. E. consequent upon the Chicago convention will be great. At present there are 208,000 employes of the United States Government organized under the American Federation of Labor—that is, in the American Federation of Government Employes, the three postal unions and the various craft unions. This number represents more than one-fourth of all Government employes as reported by the Civil Service Commission as of October 31, 1935, the figure for that date having been 796,297.

Various estimates have been made of the number of State, city and county employes in the United States, the highest fixing it at about 4,000,000 and the lowest at about 2,500,000. The wide variation is due in part to the seasonal character of some of the jobs, such as road building, etc., and in part to some difficulties in ascertaining just who are city, county and State employes, since these governmental units have their "twilight zones" just as does the National Government in such agencies as the Home Owners Loan Corporation, the Federal Reserve Board and the Inland Waterways Corporation.

The two corporations are both corporations through which the National Government operates; the employes of the first are quite definitely recognized as Government employes, except in certain more or less technical respects, whereas the employes of the latter are not regarded as Government employes at all. The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks have a somewhat equivocal status and many more examples might be cited.

Teachers Subtracted.

Taking the smaller figure, then, as the group probably capable of organizing, under the A. F. G. E. banner, there must be subtracted from this total of 2,500,000 all teachers, firemen and craftsmen. The whole 2,500,000 might very well be organized under the American Federation of Labor, probably the number eligible to membership in the American Federation of Government Employes will be about 1,000,000 less, meaning a total potential field of about 1,500,000.

The number of State, municipal and county employes now organized under Federal charters of the A. F. of L., and to be represented at the Chicago meeting, is, of course, very small by comparison. Since the A. F. of L. had neither facilities nor occasion to organize these groups, it simply accepted the affiliation of those who sought it of their own volition.

The number of State, county and municipal employes who are actually organized, though not affiliated at present with the A. F. of L., is, however, very large; one State organization is reported to have 60,000 members, and another nearly as many. Since the Chicago convention will give these groups an international union of their own, the impetus toward organization and A. F. of L. affiliation is expected to be great.

From Public's View.

From the point of view of the public, of course, the advantage of organization will depend in large degree upon the success attained through such organization in extending the principles of the civil service and the merit system. Today, comparatively few States and cities have a real civil service or a real merit system. The employes want it, amost without execption, and they feel that organization can win it for them.

The public wants it, because a real civil service means economy and efficiency in the Government service, and with the multiplicity of subordinate governmental organizations in this country, the savings achieved through bringing them all under civil service would very likely amount to billions of dollars a year.

THEY'RE marrying these days at the Soil Conservation Service. Last week Mary Davis (C), drafting section, was married to Edward Snyder, of Baltimore. She will leave soon to make her home in that city.

Lillian Wieland (C), has served as secretary to H. H. Bennett, chief of the service for four years. She was married on November 25 to J. R. DeLong, also of the Soil Conservation Service. Fellow employes will tender her a farewell party and gifts at an informal ceremony Saturday afternoon, after which she will leave for Colorado Springs, where Mr. DeLong is chief clerk, ECW division.

Blakey Entertains Staff.

Members of the staff of the Division of Economic Research, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, were entertained at a dinner party at the Stratford Hotel last night by Dr. and Mrs. Roy G. Blakey. Dr. Blakey, who has been chief of the division since October 1, is here on a year'sleave from his post as professor of economics at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis.

Dancing, games and group singing were indulged in during the informal "get-together" after dinner. In arranging the affair, Mrs. Blakey was assisted by Miss Anna M. Guindon (P), and Miss Edna N. Sater of the division.

Bigwigs of Bridge Arrayed Against Each Other Again After Settling Row About Honors

Organizations Contend On Matter of Prestige

Leaders of Association and League Much Exercised by Merger Issue, but Players Regard Contest With Calm.

By Frank B. Lord.

National bridge warfare has broken out again, but this time on a new front. Just as the contract laymen were becoming reconciled to the agreement between the American Bridge League and the United States Bridge Association on the question of the count and no count of honors in duplicate, a new issue has arisen which continues the division in the hierarchy of the game.

It seems that the matter of the honor count was a sort of a tryout to see if the two organizations could get together and allow the bridge fans to indulge in their favorite pastime without any disturbance that would be more serious than might result from a partner's incorrect lead, or a bid out of turn. When, after several months of dispute and controversy, it was decided that honors should count in cumulative scoring and should not count in match-point scoring, it was thought that the fans were in for an era of good feeling and bigger and better bids, if any. The peace, however, was short-lived. In fact, while the settlement of the difference on this point was in the making and an armistice was being effected by the promulgation of new duplicate laws to be enforced for some years to come, another casus belli was being fomented.

Amalgamation Sought.

The question of amalgamation was broached and there was talk of how perfectly lovely it would be if the two national bodies—the American Bridge League and the United States Bridge Association—could unite in one big league and control all the local tournaments and the prizes and championship matches and the award of master points, under one simple management. Such an outcome, while highly important to the Nation-wide experts and the players in the upper brackets, is of lesser concern to the average run of the mill players in the provinces. They are deeply interested in it, but it does not affect them nearly so seriously as did the failure to agree on the issue of honors.

While that question was pending they did not know from one bid to another where they stood, and it influenced their play. Whether there is one supreme body, or two, seeking to exercise authority over them, is something they don't mind so much. They can affiliate with one body or the other and let it go at that so long as the rules of the game are the same in both.

With the big-wigs, however, it is different. Neither side wishes to yield its prestige or its prerogatives. Neither side is willing to surrender certain points upon which the other insists as a basis for union. Three times the ministers plenipotentiary of the two rival organizations have met and discussed the issues upon which they have divided, and the third time were no nearer a solution than the first. They appear to be no closer to an agreement now than they were at the outset.

Statement Reported.

William E. McKenney, secretary of the American Bridge League, is said to have issued a statement to the press in Cleveland which some construed as an agreement. Whether it was meant as such or not is uncertain. At any rate, Ely Culbertson, acting president of the United States Bridge Association and the controller of its actions and its destiny, declares that he has not agreed. He asserts that he is ready to bring up his shock troops and throw them into battle. That looks very much like a Geneva armament conference agreement, where all parties go home to build up more and stronger fighting forces. There the matter rests for the time being with the millions of bridge players throughout the country standing on the sidelines and awaiting further developments.

The third additional organization—the American Whist League—does not appear to be taking any part in the controversy. It is the oldest of the organizations, having been formed some 40 years ago. It is strictly a body of intellectuals whose favorite game is old-fashioned whist, not modern contract, although it has within the past five or six years yielded to the contract craze and included its game upon the program of its congresses. Its membership is small and rather exclusive, and the American Bridge League Association don't seem to be bothering much whether or not it comes into the one big league.

Local League Affiliated.

Scientific whist, which was what whist got to be before it was crowded off the card tables by auction and contract, is more or less a foreign language to a vast majority of the great army of contract players and is only a little better known to a select few of the contract experts. So what matters it if the whist players do not come into the suggested union of all bridge players?

The Washington Bridge League, which is the representative bridge organization of the Capital, is an affiliate of the American Bridge League, and, of course, indorses the action that body is seeking to take for amalgamation, but its members can continue playing as they have been doing while the parent organizations are each seeking supremacy in the bridge field.

The Federal Bridge League, an organization composed exclusively of Government employes, and the second largest body of players in the District, does not affiliate with either the American Bridge League, or the United States Bridge Association, and while many of its members follow the Culbertson system of playing, the league tacitly recognizes the former body. It did so while the honor count controversy was being fought out.

Swobbers Continue Drive to the Front

Federal League Group Wins Top Score Again.

The Swobbers continued their drive in the Federal Bridge League last Tuesday night at 2400 Sixteenth street by winning top score in their section for the third consecutive time. They also led the teams in all sections with 13 boards to their credit out of 18. They lost only two boards and halved six.

For the first time since opening of the season nearly three months ago the District Government team failed to win half the boards in their section. They won 8½ boards out of 18 while the Architects were winning 11½ out of 18. In section B the Nomads and the Alphas were tied, each winning 9 boards out of 13.

The District Government team remains at the head of the list with the Physchems, of the Bureau of Standards, the Argonne Marines and the Swobbers fighting for second place.

Two weeks more remain of the first half of the tournament series.

Team of Four Playing Elicits Interest Here

Washington bridge players are indicating a steadily increasing interest in team-of-four play. Its popularity is attested by the fact that the Washington Bridge League has drawn 22 teams in each of its two team-of-four games of the winter series. In addition, the Clifford Challenge Trophy matches are filled to the limit of four challenges a month.

The Interclub Bridge Federation is putting 16 teams in its matches, representing eight different social organizations. Inasmuch as there is very little overlapping in these three contests it is apparent that there are more than 200 players involved. Most experienced players, duplicate players, recognize that team-of-four play is one of the most fascinating forms of the game, and the organizations are to be congratulated on giving them an opportunity for this style of contract.

Bulletin Boasts Of Baltimorean Conquest Here

Bridge League's Circular Makes Much of Team From That City.

Baltimore contract fans continue to boast, and not without just cause, of the victory of two of their number in the recent Washington Bridge League annual tournament.

Says the Maryland Bridge League Bulletin, of which Joseph Grinfelder is editor:

"Fulfilling the prophecy of your editor, the coveted Woodward Cup, awarded to the winners of the Washington Bridge League pair event, was won by two Baltimoreans, Mrs. James D. Cairnes and Mrs. Alan Rutherford.

"In winning this trophy the Cairnes-Rutherford team triumphed over some of the best bridge players of the East. They were the second winners in the qualifying round and continued their brilliant play in the finals, winning the tournament in a most convincing manner. Among the nationally known players competing were the French-Peterson team of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. Lemon, of Washington; the Stockvis-Conelly team, of Washington; the Lord-Kunkel combination and many others. The editor congratulates the winners and wishes them continued success."

Maryland Tourney Will Start on Feb. 6

Large Delegation Expected From Washington.

The Maryland State championship tournament of the American Bridge League, to be held in Baltimore, is scheduled for February 6, 7, 8 and 9, as follows:

Mixed pair, evenings, February 6 and 7 (Thursday and Friday).

Open team, afternoon and evening, February 8 (Saturday).

Open pair, afternoon and evening, February 9 (Sunday).

A Washington team consisting of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Lemon, Mrs. Martin R. West and A. P. Stockvis, at present hold the team championship of the league.

The event is to be conducted by Russell J. Baldwin, of Cleveland, as director. American Bridge League master points will be awarded in the two open championships. The program will be issued about January 15.

Mary Belle Williams bid and made her first vulnerable grand slam last week playing with Mrs. Harold Young at the latter's home. Their adversaries were Mrs. L. D. Gilbert and Miss Nell Williams. The bid was seven spades, which was reached by the no-trump convention method.

New Rules Used to Solve Unique Score Problem

Three pairs tied for first place in the bridge game at the Shoreham Monday afternoon. They were Mrs. Nelson Perkins and Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Alma Byrne and Dr. H. E. Claus, and Mrs. Charles Harvey and Mrs. Denholm. A similar situation had not occurred before and resort was necessary to the new bridge rules. Each pair scored 63½ points and a breakdown by use of the cumulative system showed Mrs. Perkins and Mrs. Robinson the winners, with the other two pairs tied. Breaking this tie resulted in favor of Mrs. Harvey and Mrs. Denholm. An unusual feature of the situation was that the second and third pairs should be tied in the cumulative score.

Hand Is Played By Six Teams For Six Results

Figures in Card Records of One of Sections of the Federal League.

Here is a deal that was played in one of the four sections at the Federal Bridge League by six different teams with six different results, the highest being six spades doubled, which was made.

North
S—none
H—J, 7, 5, 3
D—K, 9, 8, 5, 2
C—9, 4, 3, 2

West	East
S—A, Q, J, 10, 9	S—K, 8, 7, 5
H—10, 6, 4, 2	H—A, Q, 5
D—J, 7	D—Q
C—Q, J	C—A, K, 8, 6, 5

South
S—6, 4, 3, 2
H—K, 9
D—A, 10, 6, 4, 3
C—10, 7

The results were:

No. 1. Five spades and made six.

No. 2. Four spades and made four.

No. 3. Three diamonds doubled and set two.

No. 4. Four spades and made five.

No. 5. Five spades doubled and made six.

No. 6. Six spades doubled and made six.

J. L. Thomas, member of the Phychems team of the Bureau of Standards, bid and made six spades doubled, and had the most difficult opening possible in the circumstances. His partner was Harry T. Wensel. North led the three of hearts through the ace-quen in dummy. West had four small hearts and was forced to win with the ace, otherwise South would have captured the trick and immediately led his ace of diamonds and set the hand. West then led the five of spades, winning with the ace, and discovered that all the missing trumps were held by South.

Accordingly, he led two more spades and then switched to clubs, winning with the queen and jack. A small spade to dummy's king took out the last of South's trumps. Declarer then led three good clubs from dummy, discarding two losing diamonds and one heart.

This left the dummy with the queen of diamonds, the queen and five of hearts, and declarer with ten and six of hearts and one trump.

The next lead was a bold one. It was the five of hearts, which South was obliged to win with his king of hearts. This was the only trick taken by north and south, for when south led his ace of diamonds, west trumped and then led his remaining heart to the good queen of that suit.

Where the opening lead was a small diamond, south won with the ace and the remaining tricks were easily taken by the declarer. It was usually a spade which west won, then trumped the jack of diamonds in dummy and continued with trumps until south's spades were exhausted. He then cashed his queen and jack of clubs, reached dummy with the ace of hearts, discarding three losing hearts on the good clubs and had one remaining trump for the remaining heart in dummy.

Players Who Have 'Fun' At Bridge Miss Much

No So-Called Authority Has Right to Dictate to Them, Says Expert, but He Can Point Out the Pleasure Sacrificed.

By Ely Culbertson.

No so-called authority has the right to dictate the spirit in which a game should be played. If a golf dub's happiness involves an inordinate amount of turf digging, no one (except the greens committee) should interfere. And if bridge players get fun out of tossing cards around like confetti, with as little regard for technique as they might have for calculus, that is their privilege. Their watchword is that they "play for fun; why make a problem out of it?"

The point is, the "problem" is inherent in the game and cannot be removed. The attempt to remove it merely converts it into another game: a semi-adult slap-jack.

The most any one can do is to try to point out to such players what they are missing. No intelligent person is insensible to pride of personal performance. Like Diamond Jim Brady's vulgar but sage observation concerning jewels, "Them as has 'em wears 'em," people with brains use them—and find pleasure in it!

* * * *

I cannot vouch for this story—in cold black and white it undoubtedly will appear even less credible than when it was told to me and sworn to by an eyewitness. But in the eerie hours near drawn, when it is supposed to have transpired, strange things happen, and—well, anyway, I think it's funny.

It seems that two men who were not particularly acute at bridge even in their most wide-awake hours were partners for a certain rubber against a well-known expert (known to be scrupulously ethical) and a dub partner. Both sides were vulnerable when Mr. Expert and his partner, by a series of weird bids, found themselves doubled in a horrible contract. This was the hand:

NORTH
♠ 9 8 6 4
♥ 7 4 3
♦ K 9 6
♣ K 5 2

WEST	EAST
♠ 2	♠ K Q J 10
♥ J	♥ A K Q 8 5 2
♦ Q J 10 5 3 2	♦ 7
♣ Q J 10 9 8	♣ 6 3

SOUTH
♠ A 7 5 3
♥ 10 9 6
♦ A 9 4
♣ A 7 4

Exactly how, I don't know, but after fierce bidding by all four players South landed in four spades, doubled and vulnerable. It should be obvious that on proper defense he can take exactly five tricks, which, with East's 100 honors, would result in a penalty of 1,500 points. But South was a super-expert—and it was very late; he made the contract! This is how he did it:

West opened the heart jack, and South ruffed it! A club was led to dummy's king, another heart led and ruffed by South. North's other king was used as an entry and the third heart duly ruffed.

Now the second phase of attack was launched. A heart was led by South and ruffed by North. A club returned the lead to the ace for the second ruff. Now a spade to the ace put South in again and he ruffed his last heart.

East religiously followed to the six leads of hearts, and poor West could never overruff with his miserable deuce of trumps.

And when it was all over, and East felt it necessary to defend his "miserable double," he said plaintively, "These cross-ruff hands are certainly hard to beat!"

* * * *

I have often mentioned the blind spots of experts. The hand below fits very nicely into this category:

NORTH
♠ A Q 6 5 2
♥ A 7 2
♦ A 10 6 5

WEST	EAST
♠ J 10 9 7 3	♠ 8
♥ J 10 6 3	♥ Q 9 8 4
♦ 7 4	♦ 9 8 3 2
♣ K Q	♣ 9 7 5 2

SOUTH
♠ K 4
♥ K 5
♦ K Q J
♣ A J 10 6 4 3

The bidding [both sides vulnerable]:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♦	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
4 N. T.	Pass	6 ♦	[final bid]

East opened the 4 of hearts, fearing that the singleton spade might pick up an honor in his partner's hand. The ace of hearts won, and a clubs was led to South's ace. When the queen dropped from West, a small club was led and ruffed. Now all that was necessary was to draw three rounds of trumps, leaving East with the thirteenth, and to run clubs till he trumped in. Nothing could be more simple, but the expert declarer fretted himself into quite a state over the danger of the trumps breaking four and two, which would mean that a defender would still have a trump when he had none. So he embarked on a cross-ruff plan. Even this would not have been fatal except that he chose to ruff out his losing heart before leading two rounds of spades. East ruffed the second spade and led a trump, effectively spiking the declarer's guns.

At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

"Resolved, that in the death of Frank B. Walker, the Capital City Chess Club has suffered the loss of one of its most esteemed members and our sincere sympathy is extended to his family for their loss. Mr. Walker's unfailing courtesy and ready smile will long be remembered wherever chess players are gathered together. Further resolved, that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the directors and also sent to Mr. Walker's family."

Thus, sorrowfully assembled in special meeting, did officials of the local club pay final tribute to one of its outstanding players, who had been associated with its organization for upward of 50 years. Chess friends throughout the Nation will mourn his passing.

Mr. Walker died of pneumonia, Saturday, November 30, at George Washington University Hospital, age 78. And today we pause to pay homage to a gentleman and a chess player by briefly summarizing his exploits.

When a lad of 14, in Cleveland, Mr. Walker inaugurated his chess career auspiciously by defeating then United States Champion Capt. Mackenzie, who pronounced him the best young chess player he had ever seen. Some ten years later, in 1882, he moved to Washington to accept a position in the Judge Advocate's office of the War Department. After obtaining law degrees at Columbian College and Georgetown University, he transferred to the Interior Department, from which, in 1929, he retired while chief of the Indian lands division, general lands office. Since his retirement his consuming interest was his column "In Chess Circles," which he edited for the Star.

Mr. Walker lost no time in becoming active in local chess affairs and in 1896 he acquired the District championship title, which he defended successfully in match play until 1900, the while strong players such as W. A. Gwyer, jr., Capt. Patrick O'Farrell, L. Tharp and E. P. Hanna challenged. Vladimir Sournin eventually wrested the title from his grasp, but he regained it in tournament play in 1927 and remained champion until 1931. In 1896 he was awarded a medal for finishing in the finals of the Atlantic division of the Pillsbury National Correspondence Chess Association and was instrumental in defeating Brooklyn in intercity play. Numerous times he held the championship titles of the home, and later the Capital City Chess clubs. In 1921 and 1922 he was president of the latter organization. He invariably played top board positions in important matches with Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and others, and competed in the international cable matches with London in 1928 and 1930.

Mr. Walker was active to the last, having just finished competing in the District championship event, and was planning to play against Baltimore yesterday and to enter the correspondence chess match between England and America.

His own words convey his love for chess:

"Chess has always been a delight to me, a discipline for the mind, especially blindfold playing. But it is necessary to restrain the desire to play, to keep it within bounds, the same as with any other hobby or sport." Had he not done so, in his prime, he may well have become a master player.

His favorite, for years, was an innocent appearing variation in the Center Counter Gambit, which won him many battles. And this game, played in the club championship tourney of 1922, we dedicate to him who made and was District chess history, which suffers irreparably with his loss.

Scout Renders First Aid to Save Girl

Tourniquet Is Used to Stop Flow of Blood

Picnicker Hurried to Doctor After Fall Into Ravine.

Because Matthew McClintock, of 601 S. Pine street, Richmond, Va., kept sufficient presence of mind in an emergency to apply first-aid methods learned as a Scout, Margaret Parrish lives today.

Her arm badly crushed by a fall at an outing, the 13-year-old girl was in danger of bleeding to death, until Matthew applied a tourniquet.

Margaret Falls From Cable Into Ravine.

The doctor who dressed Margaret's wounds said that this prompt and efficient action undoubtedly saved her life.

Matthew, a patrol leader in Troop 55, Richmond, says: "About nine boys and girls went on a hike and wiener roast to Forest Hill, a popular park through which runs a deep, rocky ravine.

Matthew McClintock.

"One of the chief attractions there is a single strand cable swing, on which one can swing across the ravine. Margaret tried to do this, but lost her hold and fell on the rocks on the opposite hill.

"The girls all screamed and yelled. Margaret's arm was bleeding badly and I put a tourniquet on it above the wound. Then Lester Witt and I took her to the doctor, who immediately rushed her to the hospital.

"It happened so quickly," Matthew concludes, "that I have no idea how I felt, except that I knew Margaret would bleed to death unless we stopped the blood."

4-H Girl Makes $1,117 On Prize-Winning Pigs

Betty Nauman, 14, West Liberty, Iowa, high school sophomore, made $1,117 on ten pigs which she raised and exhibited at a 4-H Club project this year.

She has been acclaimed throughout the Middle West for the excellence of her stock, and taken more ribbons than any other girl in the section.

"I purchased the mother of these pigs from a breeder in Riverside, Iowa, last February," Betty explains. "Ten of her little pigs I raised and exhibited at various State and county fairs, winning 44 ribbons with premiums that amounted to $347.

"After the State fair, I sold eight of them for $700, bringing my total earnings to $1,047, and later sold the other two for $70, making a grand total of $1,117 for the litter."

Calf Eats One Ribbon, Wins Another

The shorthorn calf belonging to Orville Lance, Fairview, Kans., farm boy, brought back two ribbons from the Horton, Kans., tri-county fair—one for Orville and one for himself.

"The superintendent gave me a red ribbon and I placed it in my pocket," Orville explains. "While the judge was making some remarks I noticed a commotion in the audience.

"I looked around and my calf was calmly eating my ribbon.

"I reached down his esophagus (throat, to you), but he had already swallowed it.

"The crowd was roaring at me by this time.

"The superintendent was laughing too. He was kind, however, and gave me another ribbon."

Carrier Opens Up Newspaper Route Where Six Failed

Where six boys tried and failed, Conrad Fowler has made good. He has established a route of 50 Sunday newspaper customers in less than six months in "back-country" Connecticut.

Here's the routine the 17-year-old youngster follows: Up, and a walk of a mile and a half to get his papers; then a 10-mile trek to deliver them.

Conrad Fowler.

Conrad lives on a small farm on Rural Route No. 6, out of Norwich, Conn. In the last 10 years a half-dozen boys had tried to establish routes but farmers along the way said the "up hill and down dale" territory just made "the boys' legs give out under 'em"

But the Fowlers are fighting folks. When the depression ruined the business of Conrad's dad, the family of nine went back to the land and with no outside help staged a winning battle.

"We all pitched in," says Conrad, "and the first thing you know we were beginning to get by. I guess Dad and Mother get the most credit, though, because they said they'd rather starve than have our family go on relief."

Writes About Experiences Of Reporter

Heroine Just Kind of Girl Marie Would Like to Be.

At 16, Marie Medora Shores, of the Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C., is already a successful novelist.

Her first book, "Patty McGill, Investigator," will appear in bookstores next spring. It concerns the adventures of a girl newspaper reporter who is investigating kidnaping and intrigue in the Washington diplomatic set.

"My novel was written over a year ago," Marie reports, "and I sent three chapters to a publisher, before it was finished, to try it out. He asked to see the rest of it, but by the time it was completed, his list for the year was full. Then I offered it to another house and it was accepted.

Considers Collie Dog Best Critic.

"I like to write about Patty McGill because I like her. She is just as real to me as anyone I know and just the sort of girl I would like to be myself. The rest of the people in the story just came in and started doing things."

Marie intends to show Patty more exciting times in future books. Her best critic is her collie dog, Prince. She tries all her efforts on him and says, "He listens to my stories and seems to like them. No wonder I think he is a smart dog!"

Indian Braves Sea Alone to Take Two From Sinking Boat

Braving heavy seas and a strong tide alone, when he could find no one willing to accompany him, Allen McCovey, 19-year-old Indian, of Klamath, Calif., rescued a man and woman from drowning.

"Mr. and Mrs. Kline were fishing at the mouth of the Klamath river," says Allen. "The current was swift and the boat hit the breakers and upset."

Allen pushed a 15-foot rowboat into the water and negotiated the narrow mouth of the river.

The rescue was just in time. Not 15 minutes after Allen had picked up the couple, the boat sank in the undertow far out at sea.

Ever Heard of 'Rainbow Rice?' Willis Dished Up the Recipe!

Boy Tells How He Made New Dessert and Won Cooking Prize.

Girls, listen to this tale of a boy who knows his pots and pans.

Ever hear of "rainbow rice?"

Neither had 16-year-old Willis Hughes, of 412 Locust street, Akron, Ohio, until he "invented" it. Then he found a pot of gold at the end of his rainbow. It was a dollar prize given by the home economics department of an Akron newspaper in its daily recipe contest.

"Ever since my father died last spring, my sister, brother and I have been getting supper at different times," Willis writes, explaining how he happened on the new dish.

"One night it was my place to get supper. I decided to have rice for dessert. When it was done, I went to the cupboard to get the flavoring, and happened to see some cake coloring. Well, I took it, dotted it around the rice, mixed it up. That's how I found out about rainbow rice."

Would-Be Aviatrix Grounded, Leaving Field to Brother

As Patsy Gordon Fletcher wields a clever pencil, her thoughts are in the air.

Unable to be an aviatrix because her brother is planning to be a pilot and her mother doesn't want two fliers in the family, Patsy has turned to art and is earning her Christmas money sketching pictures of her friends.

The Warrenton, Va., high school student writes: "I have been drawing the pictures for 15 cents each. I have only drawn about 12 in the last three weeks, but I hope to get more orders soon."

Patsy has been drawing since she was four and has been attending art classes, but says she doesn't like classwork.

Her desire for an air career was inspired by taking three flights!

Pupils Use Papers in Place of Textbooks

News Events Are Studied For Lessons

Homework Is Now Fun and Classwork Takes On New Interest.

Newspapers are used in the place of textbooks by seventh and eighth grade students of the Holy Cross School, South Bend, Ind.

They learn their geography from places of interest in the news of the day, their arithmetic from figuring out everyday problems, and civics from current events in Indianapolis, Washington and the other capitals of the world.

Mother's Linen Suffers.

The newspaper system was put into effect this year.

Homework consists in reading the morning and afternoon papers carefully for information bearing upon assigned topics.

Suppose one of the subjects is coal. And there is a coal strike in the Pennsylvania anthracite fields.

In looking up a definition for anthracite, the student may delve into a study of the types of coal.

One boy did this—and ruined his mother's linen.

"He demonstrated on her sheets," writes one of the school officials, "the fact that anthracite, when wiped on a white surface, leaves no mark; while high-grade bituminous leaves a smudge, and low-grade bituminous leaves an elegant trail!"

Pupil Makes Oral Reports.

In class, oral reports are made on the home study. The reports are varied since the pupil is left entirely on his own in preparing the report.

History consists in filling in the "background" for current news happenings. The new relief colony in Alaska, for example, gave rise to a study of the history of the territory.

The students have come to find homework fun, not drudgery, and classwork interesting and no longer a "pain."

Sign Painting Pays Artist's School Costs

Student Earns $2 to $3 Weekly; Also Builds Model Planes.

Harry Stanley has worked his way through four years of high school by commercial sign painting for merchants near his home at Thurmont, Md.

With the $2 to $3 earned each week he also builds model airplanes, buys new art equipment and has established a fund with which he hopes to take up airplane designing when he is graduated next spring.

Harry, now 17, took up art work simply because he liked it. He first consults his customers, learns exactly what they have to advertise and what they want, paints the sign and then talks prices. He usually gets his price.

Bedfellows All—a Mouse, Cat and Lion

"Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows," said Shakespeare, and maybe that accounts for the strange friendship between a lioness, a pussycat and a mouse over at Southend-on-Sea, England.

All three animals share the same cage and appear to be on the best terms imaginable, eating, sleeping and even playing together.

But the real treat for the visitor is at cleaning-up time. Then the lioness carefully washes the pussy cat with her tongue, while the pussy cat licks the mouse—not her chops.

Old Gas Tank Turned Into Diving Helmet

Walking under water with a bucket turned over one's head isn't very healthy. The tiny amount of air imprisoned in the vessel soon becomes too foul to breathe.

But when Harold Hummer, Edwin Kampinen, Paul Mackey and Arne Pokky, all 17, of Ashtabula, Ohio, saw the fun some of their friends were having at the sport, they decided to make a real diving helmet for themselves.

Meeting at Edwin's home, 1038 W. Sixth street, they constructed the helmet from an old auto gas tank by cutting it in two and welding a boat porthole on in front. A length of hose was then attached to the top through which air is forced to the diver by a tire pump. For communication, they installed a transmitter and earphones inside.

"We usually stay down from 10 to 20 minutes," Edwin explains "and have reached a depth of 30 feet.

"Our first salvage job was a bicycle which had fallen from a dock. Later we explored the sunken schooner, Belle Brown, and have spent much time searching for lost outboard motors in nearby Lake Erie."

Spelling Star Plans to Be Stenographer

If Evelyn J. Jones becomes a stenographer, as she plans, she will never want for a job.

What every businessman desires is a stenographer who can spell. Evelyn already fills the bill. She's the champion speller of New York State.

Despite the fact she misspelled the word "cachet" in the finals of the State spelling bee, Evelyn won the title and a $50 purse. She is 13 years old and an eighth grade student at the Cayuga Lake Academy in Aurora, N. Y.

Lad Clings to Fast Freight On Wild Ride

Train Carries Milton on 'Hobo Trip' at 60-Mile Clip.

"My first ride on a freight train is also my last," says Milton Merritt, 9, of 330 N. Pulaski street, Baltimore, Md.

Trapped on the roof of a freight car on which he had been playing when the train started to move, Milton had to ride all the way to Washington, D. C., at a 60-mile-an-hour clip before he could get off.

Stranded on Ladder.

As the train started, he scrambled for the iron ladder at the end of the car and climbed down. Before he could get close enough to the ground to jump, however, the train had gathered such speed that he was afraid to leap.

Then, unable to climb back, he screamed for help. About 20 minutes later an unidentified Negro helped him back to the top of the car, where he remained until the train pulled into Washington.

Police Come to Aid.

Meantime, police had been notified by his parents and Milton was taken into custody and returned to Baltimore a sadder and a wiser boy for his harrowing experience.

What a Wait, Waiting For A Train At Wait!

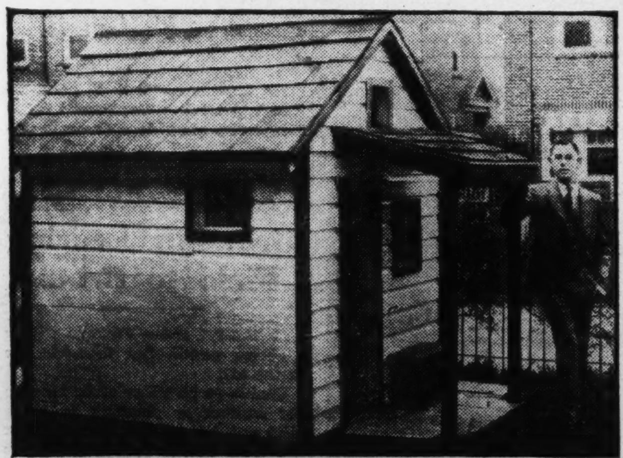
The train that traverses Ruthenia, province of Czecho-Slovakia, halts at an obscure station. "Wait!" cries the guard.

"For what?" demand the passengers. "Where are we?"

"Wait!" yells the porter. "Wait!" screams the conductor.

Finally, it dawns upon even the dullest traveler that they're all calling the name of the station. "Wait" is the meaning of the name "Pockaj" which appears on station signs in local dialect.

Amateur Carpenter Constructs Playhouse for His Two Sisters



This Is the House that Samuel Potts (right) Built.

Samuel B. Potts, 18, of 303 West Thirty-fifth street, Wilmington, Del., built a playhouse for his two sisters, Betty, 10, and Nancy, 6.

The house is 6 feet square, 6 feet high, has four windows and an additional one in the peaked roof. Sam's only tools were a saw, hammer, screwdriver, 6-inch square and a 6-foot rule.

Materials were salvaged from another construction job, lumber was bought for the weather boarding and shingles for the roof. Sam's uncle, Mr. Philip Potts, donated an old cupboard door.

'Baby Stars' of Silent Days Return to Talkies

Even in the days of silent pictures, there were a few "baby stars." And some of them, now mostly in their 'teens, are having their day once more in the current motion picture, "Ah, Wilderness."

They include Peggy Montgomery, known in the silent days as "Baby Peggy;" Dick Winslow, who appeared in many silent films as "Dickie" Winslow; Nancy Price, who scored in "Women Love Diamonds;" Buddy Messenger, one-time boy comedian, and Muriel McCormack, who achieved fame under the name of "Baby Muriel McCormack."

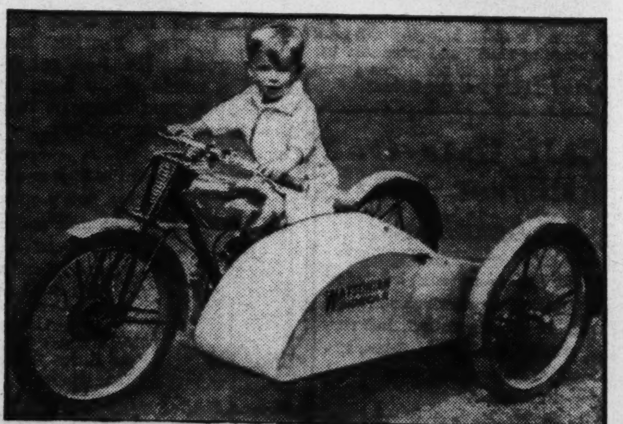
World's Youngest Motorcyclist Tours Racetracks With His Dad



Leonard Malcolm Vale-Onslow on His Midget Motorcycle.

Clear the track for 2-year-old Leonard Malcolm Vale-Onslow, of Birmingham, England, the world's youngest motorcyclist!

Leonard, son of England's noted grass track rider, Mr. L. H. Vale-Onslow, rides a miniature cycle built for him by his dad.

Smartly finished in red and chromium plate, his machine is capable of 45 m. p. h., but a throttle stop keeps him from exceeding 15.

"Leonard has appeared before about 50,000 people," writes Mr. Vale-Onslow. "I have been taking both son and machine to all the motorcycle race meetings where I have appeared. He knows every part of a motorcycle and what it does, and has been riding his machine since he was 22 months old. Leonard seems to have plenty of nerve, but I ballast the side car with bricks or sand to hold it down in case he takes a sharp left-hand turn!"

Rush Trio to Safety, Join Fire Brigade

Flames Eat Into Room As Harrys Arrive in Nick of Time.

"Look! A fire!"

Harry Hutchinson, 15-year-old Boy Scout, of Rensselaer, N. Y., is scrambling out of a parked car as he shouts. His fellow scout, Harry Holton, 14, is at his heels.

They do a 100-yard dash in nothing flat right into the living room of a burning structure at Lake Desolation in the Adirondacks Mountains.

On the floor are two small children. They snatch them up, carry them out.

Then a baby cries. Both hear it. The smoke is blinding as they re-enter the house.

"It was almost too much for us," they write Parade.

"We waited for a moment and made a dash for the bedroom. There lay a tiny baby on the bed, choking from the smoke. The ceiling was lined with tar paper and alread beginning to burn with a stifling smoke.

"We got the baby out and then joined the bucket brigade our friends were forming and put out the blaze."

The parents had left the house for a moment's visit to neighbors. The boys had been camping near the summer colony and had driven to Desolation. The other members of the party were visiting stores, leaving the two Harrys in the car.

Pigskin Game Goes On Despite Interruptions

If it takes fighting spirit to make football players, then the Notre Dame Midgets and the St. Patrick Torpedoes, of Newark, N. J., have what it takes.

Meeting in Military Park the other afternoon, the 22 youngsters, ranging in age from 11 to 14, started to battle it out. But the police made them get off the field.

Nothing daunted, they went next to Washington Park, were stopped again, and repaired to the lawn in front of the City Hall. Once more the police intervened and this time a delegation decided to see the mayor.

The mayor wasn't handy, but they told their woes to the director of public safety. He in turn referred them to Vincent deP. Slavin, a Newark newspaperman, who took the boys to a regular gridiron and acted as timekeeper, head linesman, and referee while they settled their football differences.

The Deer Boy

There was a young lady from Niger,
Who smiled as she rode on a tiger.
They returned from the ride
With the lady inside
And a smile on the face of the tiger.

Stanley Hubert, 13 months old, may never have heard that famous limerick, but he was in almost the same spot recently. Only Stanley rode a deer and came back still on the outside.

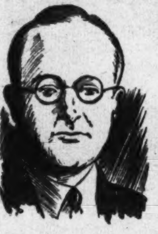
It seems the deer came right up to Stanley's house in Harrison Mills, British Columbia, licked Stanley's face, and then ran away with Stanley on its antlers. Mrs. Hubert heard Stanley crying. Then she screamed and chased the deer for dear life.

Finally the sweater threads which held Stanley to the antlers parted company, and so did Stanley and the deer.

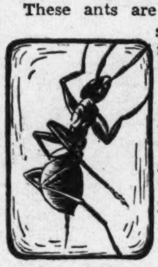
Mold of 'Ant Skyscraper' Reveals Deep Dungeons for Slave Swarms

Ants build skyscrapers under the ground—sort of reverse skyscrapers that go down instead of up.

Thomas Midgley, jr., Worthington, Ohio, chemist, shown below, discovered that recently on a trip to Florida.



Down an ant hole he poured molten Wood's metal — an alloy which melts at low temperatures. The metal seeped into every nook and cranny and hardened. Then he dug it up and washed it. The pattern he saw was amazing. His model was 20 inches high (or low), contained 70 rooms. It was a veritable underground palace, complete with galleries, nurseries, storehouses and even slave dungeons. The mold is pictured on right. The species of ants that fashioned this skyscraper, Mr. Midgley could not determine. But he feels certain that they were one of two varieties of slave-owning ants that inhabit subtropical America.

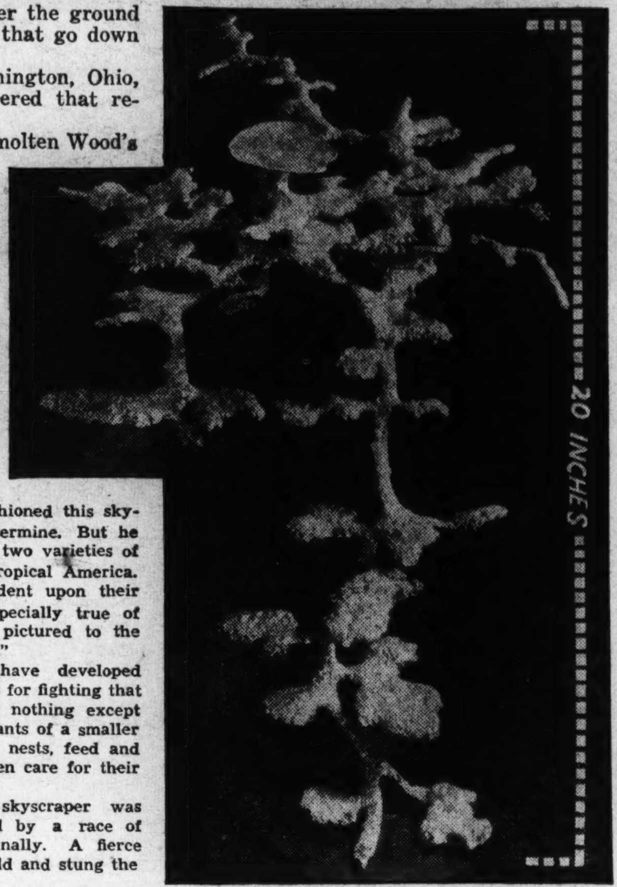


These ants are absolutely dependent upon their slaves. This is especially true of the fierce species pictured to the left, the "Amazons."

The Amazons have developed such huge pinchers for fighting that they are good for nothing except fighting. Servant ants of a smaller species build their nests, feed and wash them and even care for their young.

Mr. Midgley's skyscraper was probably inhabited by a race of weaker ants originally. A fierce Amazon queen invaded the stronghold and stung the reigning queen to death.

There she laid her own eggs, and forced the inhabitants to care for her young. When the warrior children matured they turned on their nurses and forced them into slavery.



Thus the weaker ants dug their own dungeons in the lower reaches of the skyscraper and there were forced to spend the nights under guard after days of exhausting labor. Prisoners in their own palace!

Inspired by Col. Lindbergh's flight, Ray Shephard began building model airplanes. Today, at 18, he is working in a large airplane factory.

He won the model building championship of Hawaii and was sent to the United States to visit aircraft factories and compete in the national contest.

At the same time Ray began his model work, four other Hawaiian boys did the same. Now, all of them are pilots and one, Alfred Smith, after learning to fly in this country, has his own flying school in Hawaii.

The others, Ronald Row, James Kagawa and Euclid Watts, like Ray Shephard, have sought air careers in this country. They're studying aeronautics at various colleges.

Santa Is Named in Suit for $25,000

Alabamans down Birmingham-way are wondering if Santa Claus is going to call this Christmas.

Santa has been sued for damages.

A Birmingham woman claims Santa tossed a lollypop right in her eye while he was giving out candy.

If the jury decides in favor of the woman, it won't be Santa who must pay the $25,000 demanded, however. Those who sponsored his appearance will be the losers.

Win or lose, will Santa become offended? That is the question, say Alabama youngsters.

Three Gifted Brothers Toe Way to Fame

Mitchells Prove Popular in Stage and Radio Performances.

Gangway for the twinkling toes of the Mitchell brothers! Junior, Edwin and Donald, aged 9, 8 and 5, respectively, of 202 School street, Chicopee, Mass., have been setting the folks around their home town "ga-ga" with their dancing and singing for some time. And it is rumored they are headed for big time stage and radio appearances.

Many organizations, theater-goers and radio listeners have thrilled to the rhythm of six twinkling feet as the Mitchells did their stuff.

It all began when Junior started taking dancing lessons at 5. A year later Edwin joined him and a short time ago Donald, nicknamed "Snookie," took up the good work.

All are keenly interested in sports and do much bicycle riding, coasting, swimming and ice skating. Junior's hobby is model airplane making. Edwin spends his spare time showing sound motion pictures and staging vaudeville shows. "Snookie" is concerned with the welfare of Mac, the trio's pet Scotty.

Lad Travels 10,000 Miles, Becomes Star

Clifford Severn Tells How It Feels to Be Film Actor.

Editor's Note: How does it feel to become a movie star? This 9-year-old lad traveled all the way from South Africa to Hollywood—10,000 miles—to find out.

By Clifford Severn, jr.

Our family moved to Hollywood a few months ago because father was in ill health. Joining a cricket club which included many famous movie stars, he often took us youngsters along to practice and play, and we soon got to know several of them.

Clifford Severn.

Then one happy day Mr. Nigel Bruce, the actor, suggested that I take a screen test for the part of the English boy, "Wake," in RKO Radio's production of "Jalna."

My heart leaped for joy after my first interview with Mr. John Cromwell, the director, and when he gave me some script to take home and learn, I was so enthusiastic that I knew my lines with just two readings. I could not wait for the time to see Mr. Cromwell again.

At the appointed time, my daddy took me down. It was like going before King George. I felt just like a person who could walk on the sea.

Then, before I had time to realize it, I was actually in front of the cameras with some of the finest artists to be seen anywhere.

But I am afraid I was too much alive. My eyes were everywhere—so were my ears and person. I had to learn there is a time to be "on" and a time to be "off," and that one must hold control. Every day was a new surprise, and I found myself very curious and full of beans.

I have received many kind offers since finishing "Jalna," and the more I think of it, the more I realize how lucky I am.

"The little things are what count," said the school teacher, "but you can't imagine the time I have making them do it."

Warmer Winters.

1 Grandpa is right. The winters aren't as cold as they used to be. No less an authority than the United States Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C., backs him up.

"Our studies," declares the bureau, "based on reliable data, prove that the climate has been growing milder.

"For example, the winter temperature records of Washington from 1912 to 1933 show that 18 have been warmer than normal; that 13 in succession have been definitely mild, and that the winter of 1931-32 was the warmest of a record which goes back more than a century."

A similar situation is found in nearly every locality. "As a matter of fact," says the bureau, "this long-time trend toward greater warmth is national and, indeed, international."

But this doesn't mean that we won't have any more cold winters. The present movement is only part of a vast cycle. In another 100 years the winters may be colder than ever.

And when the youngsters of today become graybeards they may sit before a crackling fire and recall the "warm winters we used to have."

Gasoline From Coal.

2 Nature required millions of years to make petroleum. But an English firm now makes gasoline, motor oils, asphalt and other products from coal in a few minutes.

Coal has long been known to contain all the ingredients of oil, but getting them out has been a difficult task. Chemists finally solved the problem by mixing oil with powdered coal to form a paste. This paste is then made to combine with hydrogen under dangerously high temperature and pressure. Out comes a synthetic crude oil which is piped into a "cooker," or huge furnace, and refined to make gasoline.

The English firm is now producing about 150,000 tons of gasoline a year from coal. In Germany, too, large plants have been built, and it is claimed the Germans will be independent of other countries insofar as gasoline is concerned by 1940.

Naturally, all of this is good news to the idle coal miners of England and Germany. If coal gasoline proves popular the mines will hum with greater activity than ever before.

But more important, the process means that man will have gasoline to run motors for at least 6,000 years. For while petroleum will probably be exhausted by the end of the century, some experts predict, we have enough coal to last some 60 centuries, geologists say.

Forbidden Marble.

3 One nation inconveniences itself every time it punishes another, it was somewhat humorously demonstrated the other day by the League of Nations.

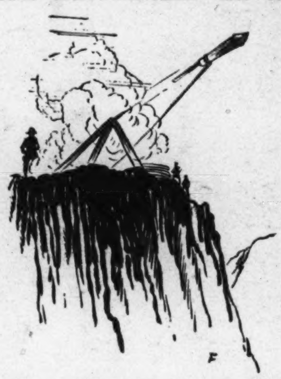
The League was to have moved into its new building in Geneva, Switzerland, November 15, but found that the interior decorations, which were to have been made from Italian marble, were not completed.

Mystified at first, by the delay, the League discovered that the terms of its policy of buying nothing from Italy until she stops fighting Ethiopia had prevented shipment of the marble from Italy, and hastily made plans to buy the necessary stone in other countries.

Useful Rockets.

4 Scientists are interested in rockets because, through them, the mysteries of space may some day be solved. Rocket ships may even carry man to distant stars and planets.

Meantime, however, business has found more immediate uses for rockets. Recently, for example, engineers were confronted with the seemingly impossible task of getting electric wires across an impassable ravine in Natal, South Africa.



The problem was solved by shooting them across with rockets.

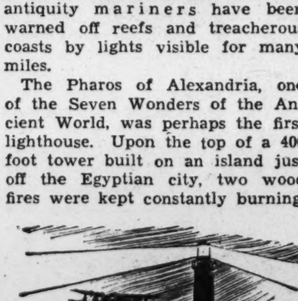
Desert Lighthouse.

5 A lighthouse in the desert! A flashing beacon far from seas and shoals, sending its rays high over infinite stretches of sands!

That sight will soon meet the eyes of desert nomad and traveler, for a gas-lit beacon is being erected in the very heart of the Sahara Desert. Mounted on a pylon 100 feet high, its beam, visible for 30 miles, will doubtless serve to guide the camel "ships of the desert," but its main purpose is to point the way for airplanes and motorists.

Inland lighthouses are developments of the flying age, but since antiquity mariners have been warned off reefs and treacherous coasts by lights visible for many miles.

The Pharos of Alexandria, one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, was perhaps the first lighthouse. Upon the top of a 400 foot tower built on an island just off the Egyptian city, two wood fires were kept constantly burning.



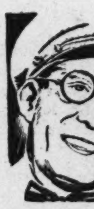
Candles were next used to furnish warning signals, followed by lamps burning first whale oil, then kerosene, kerosene oil vapor, acetylene gas, and now electricity.

All-Family Star.

6 Skating blithely and dizzily along "the Milky Way," Harold Lloyd returns to the screen after a too-long lay-off.

"The Milky Way" is the title of the comedian's new picture. It is said to give greater scope for his clean, mirthful comedy talents than any other picture he has made.

A fixture for years in the Hollywood scene, making his own pictures in his own studios, his name has become a by-word all over the world. Harold Lloyd remains essentially the same boy who at nine sold popcorn on the street, and coddled every stray dog he could find.



Not long after his birth in Burchard, Nebr., April 20, 1894, Harold's family moved to nearby Beatrice, where, to make much-needed money, he sold popcorn popped by his mother. Upon moving to Denver, Colo., the enterprising youngster bought a newspaper route, and began acting in stock whenever he could find a part.

"Lo, the Poor Indian"—that summarizes the beginning of his movie career at 19 with the old Edison Company. He was merely an extra. His first appearance was as an Indian, and all that was required of him was a couple of grunts and a few feathers. And the grunts couldn't even be heard then.

With Hal Roach, then also an extra, he began to make his own pictures in 1914. These were one-reelers called "Lonesome Lukes," with Harold in the title role. Pathe became interested in these comedies, and "Lonesome Luke" was launched on its course to success and riches.

Today, in his magnificent Hollywood mansion, which features, among other things, 27 telephones, he plans the pictures which made him the ideal "all-family" star.

And there he keeps at least 50 dogs, none of whom he will ever sell, though he will give them away.

Atom Splitting.

7 The world may blow up any minute.

So says Norton Leonard, British author, in his new book, "Tools of Tomorrow."

The explosion, he says, might be caused by scientists who are trying to split the atom. If they succeed in splitting one atom, he thinks it may touch off the others around it and shatter the whole world in the twinkling of an eye.

More important, if less spectacular, is his statement that, once the atom is harnessed we will be able to transform iron into gold, make roads by fusing the surface of the earth into lava and produce platinum from sand, and silver from water.

Science has already made radium from common table salt by bombarding it with electrons, and it seems only a matter of time until we will be able to produce enough power from a handful of dirt to run all the machinery in the country for months. The energy is there—all we have to do is find out how to utilize it.

Eskimo Recordings.

8 Eskimos are jolly folks in spite of their arduous lives. They are forever bantering each other and love nothing better than to sing, crack jokes and indulge in rough horseplay.

Heretofore one had to go all the way to Alaska, Labrador or Greenland to join in their jolliness. Now, however, anyone can listen to them sing and laugh and play—on phonograph records!

Dr. Jean Charcot, famous explorer, has just returned to Paris with 250 phonograph disks of Eskimo songs, jokes and conversation—prize trophies of a year's voyage in Arctic seas.

In addition, he brought back thousands of photographs of Eskimos, hundreds of articles such as small pots, tents and huts, and a great mass of scientific data.

Dr. Charcot, in 1906, led an expedition to Antarctica to investigate the region now known as Charcot Land.

National News

9 This year the United States Marine Corps is celebrating more than a century and a half of service. The regular Army and Navy had not yet been formed when delegates to the Continental Assembly, in 1775, authorized the formation of the corps.

It is the oldest of Uncle Sam's fighting forces and likewise the most active. It has been used for three purposes: To give the Navy a force skilled in land warfare and able to capture and hold naval bases; to act as an auxiliary to the Army in wartime, and to protect American interests abroad.

It has spent fully three-quarters of its existence protecting American interests abroad. But it was helping the Army during the World War that gave the corps its greatest glory—and at least one picturesque nickname.

"Devil Dogs," the Germans called them at Belleau Wood and Chateau Thierry—and they meant it! The sea soldiers are also known as "Leathernecks," because they formerly wore stiff leather collars.

The Marine Corps is a unit of the Navy Department, but maintains separate shore bases—one at San Diego, Calif., another at Quantico, Va., where it trains the men.

Here they are drilled to fight on land with the Army, or to take their places beside the sailors at sea. The Marine aviators perhaps have the stiffest course of training.

They must know how to navigate over land and also over water, where no landmarks guide them. They must be able to direct land artillery fire and scout with the fleet.

After such rigid practice, aviators and infantrymen are as much at home on land as on sea.

But wartime and patrol service are not the only tasks of the Marines. In 1921-22, the United States was swept by a wave of train robbery.

To protect the mail, Uncle Sam detailed his sea soldiers to guard it. In the three months Marines rode trains, not a single robbery occurred!

The reason the corps can be sent to isolated sections of the world to protect Americans in peril is because it is the only military body allowed to land on foreign soil without a declaration of war.

With their gold insignia — consisting of the world pierced by an anchor, surmounted by an eagle—glinting in the sun, Marines have seen action in the mysterious Orient, on languid South Sea Islands, in matted jungles.

Their motto is two words, "Semper Fidelis," Latin for "always faithful,"—faithful always to Uncle Sam.

The Amber Road.

10 Long ago the ground under the Baltic Sea was a great plain covered with pine forests. Sticky resin dripped from the trees, hardened around twigs, bits of bark and even insects. Then the sea drowned the forests. The trees rotted, but the resin remained. It fossilized, became amber.

Vast ages passed, but at last man came. He found the yellow amber. Long before the days of Christ, the Greeks and Romans used it for incense and jewelry. But they did not know whence it came. Phoenician sailors brought it to them from Gaul and the Gauls told them they got it from tribes living far away near waters in the north.

Long years afterward a trade route to the mysterious amber beds was opened. It was known as the Amber road. Greek and Roman merchants voyaged to the north in their quaint galleys and brought back fossil balsam. And in the amber they saw the insects and the twigs of that ancient time. But they did not know how to account for them.

Nor would we now if it hadn't been for science. Only in comparatively recent years have painstaking men been able to unravel the strange story by studying those bits of amber with the dead insects in their hearts.

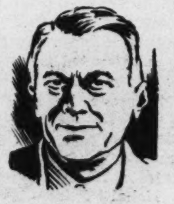
Mixed Medicine.

11 Many primitive races still regard their own medicine as better than the white man's. The Ethiopians, for example, listen patiently while a doctor explains the virtue of some modern remedy, but as soon as he has gone they revert to their time-honored cure-alls.

In the United States, the Seminole Indians, taciturn residents of the Florida Everglades, still take the white man's medicine with a dash of tribal remedies to make sure it works.

First President.

12 With the inauguration of Manuel Luis Quezon as first President of the newly created Philippine Commonwealth, another farmer boy rises to the highest office his countrymen can bestow.



President Quezon, dapper, brilliant, suave, began life as the son of a poor farmer. Born August 19, 1879, in the remote little Luzon Island village of Baler, he had to surmount not only the mountains of Luzon but the barriers of poverty to shape his own destiny.

Like the first President of the United States, Quezon worked as a surveyor. He found education across the mountains in Manila, at Santo Tomas University, where he received his law degree in 1903.

Before his admittance to the bar he had known the rigors of guerrilla warfare. He left school in 1899 to join Gen. Aguinaldo in his ill-fated revolt. And when Gen. Funston crushed Aguinaldo's forces, Maj. Quezon, among other leaders, spent six months in military prison.

The year 1903 found him resigned to American authority and prosecuting attorney for the Province of Mindoro. Two years later he became Governor of his native Province of Tayabas, and by 1907 he was a member of the Philippine Assembly.

The "Father of Philippine Independence" came to Washington as Resident Commissioner for the islands in Congress in 1909. With a dazzling smile and all the brilliance of his keen mind he began to plead the cause which has finally resulted in a definite pledge of complete freedom for the Philippines.

He remained in Washington until 1917, when he became president of the Philippine Senate. In that position he was known, unofficially, as "President of the Philippines."

He was elected first president by an overwhelming vote.

Elbow Room.

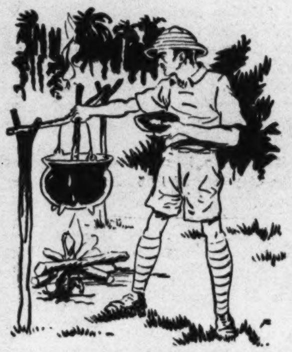
13 While some nations are hopelessly overcrowded and are justifying themselves on that ground for arming and making war to break out of their political boundaries, other parts of the world are curiously empty, says Prof. Alois Fischer, of Vienna, Austria.

According to his figures, whole continents and sub-continents are scarcely inhabited.

He thinks the United States could easily support 500 million people instead of 125 million at present, Canada, 110 million instead of only 10, and Argentina 150 millions instead of 12. Furthermore, Brazil could provide for 500 million instead of 40, and in Australia room could be found for at least 120 million instead of six.

Elixir of Life.

14 The "Elixir of Life," that mysterious substance which makes an old person young again has been rediscovered! At least so thinks James S. Lee, British official, who has spent many years in Sumatra.



Finding in the jungle a curious and unknown plant with many pods, he boiled the seeds and prepared a powder. Then he took a little of the powder and was electrified at the results.

"It produced a feeling of great vitality, the absolute perfection of mental and bodily health," he declares. "It seemed to have the power of bringing the bodily condition back to normal in every case, and producing a feeling of great happiness and content."

Experts, commenting on his find, hold that "very possibly he has rediscovered the Elixir of Life."

But it is very doubtful if there ever was such an "elixir." The priests of ancient times claimed to know what it was. During the Middle Ages alchemists spent their lives trying to rediscover it. So far as is known, however, neither the ancient priests nor the alchemists ever really found it.

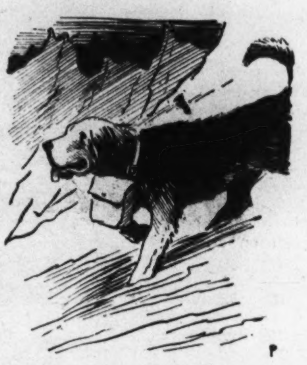
Sea Lion Safari.

15 Old Mr. Sea Lion had better curb his appetite—so far as salmon and herring are concerned. Already he has gobbled up so many of these valuable fish that Canada is "out to get him."

Last summer a government expedition scrambled over the rocky islands near Vancouver, British Columbia, counted no less than 25,000 of the flippery family eating fish. The expedition came back with boatloads of sea lions—623 lions and pups, to be exact.

Canine Postman.

16 The giant St. Bernard dog which saved a man's life in the Maurienne Alps last winter and was awarded a medal by the French government, is now postman for the Ninety-ninth Alpine Infantry of the French army.



Each day a mail sack is tied to his neck and he delivers it to an outpost 10 miles away.

The St. Bernard has a noble history. He has pulled heavy loads and made himself generally useful from the earliest times.

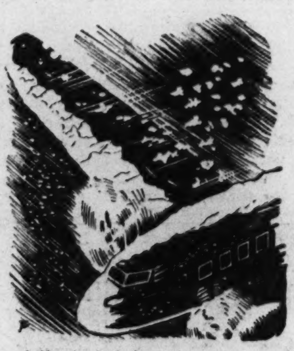
But his fame rests mostly on his rescue work. For generations the monks of the hospice at the head of the great St. Bernard Pass in the Alp mountains have trained these huge mastiffs to find travelers lost in the snow. Many a traveler owes his life to their strength and intelligence.

Air Ice-Breaker.

17 When ice forms on the wings of an airplane there is nothing for the pilot to do but land. Otherwise the plane will become too heavy to fly.

Many methods have been tried to keep the ice from forming, such as chemicals and heating devices, but none of them proved practical and airmen have despaired of solving the problem.

Now, however, engineers believe they have hit on the solution. It is a rubber hose fitted to the leading edge of the wing. When ice begins to form, the tube is alternately inflated and deflated. This breaks up the ice and the wind blows it away.



The new device has been successfully tested for two years and will soon be tried out on a large number of commercial and military airplanes.

ABC Farmers.

18 Mexican boys and girls learn how to farm almost before they can read and write.

Under a new Mexican policy, kindergarten pupils are taught farming, blacksmithing, cookery and other things farm people need to know at the same time as they learn their A B C's.

All this would probably seem strange to us. For, in the United States, boys and girls often go to kindergarten, grade school, high school and even college without necessarily learning the rudiments of a vocation.

In Mexico, however, the people make their living principally by farming, and it is just as necessary that youngsters know how to till the soil as to read and write.

WINGS OF THE WORLD

Though the sky is not yet black with aircraft, as many as 200 planes use some airports every 24 hours. This creates a traffic problem which the Bureau of Air Commerce is attempting to solve.

Traffic is now controlled by radio at large airports. Here's how it is done:

At the Controls—Perched high atop the administration building, the control tower is glass-inclosed to give perfect visibility. The operator faces the field.

In front of him is a panel holding many switches. Nearby is a microphone and short-wave radios. From a loud speaker comes the voice of a pilot on an in-coming plane.

* * * *

Clearing the Way*—It is night. A big plane is poised at the end of the runway, ready to take off. Though still a few miles away, the approaching plane's position is known to the operator. He tells the pilot on the ground to hold his ship.

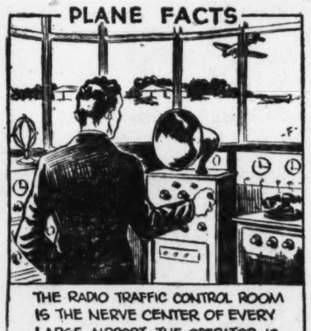
* * * *

Giving Light—As the plane looms out of the night, the operator turns a switch and, from the same direction the plane is coming, huge searchlights shoot brilliant white rays over the field. The lights are always at the pilot's back so he won't be blinded.

As the in-coming ship lands and taxies to the administration building, the operator speaks to the pilot of the out-going ship, tells him to go.

PLANE FACTS



THE RADIO TRAFFIC CONTROL ROOM IS THE NERVE CENTER OF EVERY LARGE AIRPORT. THE OPERATOR IS THE GUIDING EYE. ALL PILOTS AND PASSENGERS ENTRUST THEIR SAFETY TO HIM. FROM HIS TOWER-PERCH OVER THE FIELD HE DIRECTS EVERY IN-COMING AND OUT-GOING PLANE. HE IS ETERNALLY VIGILANT

* * * *

Twenty-four hours a day these operators control the destinies of pilots and passengers. For planes not equipped with radio, red and green lights, mounted on the tower, are used.

Mother Serves as Boxer's Second

When 18-year-old Billy Aitken, Auckland, New Zealand, boxer, goes to his corner at the end of a round, who is it that rallies 'round with the sponge and towel?

It's his mother!

Boxing officials objected to it at first, but an examination of the rules showed there was nothing to prevent it.

Mrs. Aitken says she wants to watch over Billy until he gains more years and experience.

The Littlest Rebel: This well-known play of Civil War days by Edward Peple is being brought to the screen by Twentieth Century-Fox. With Shirley Temple and John Boles in the leading roles, it should go like this:

When the Cary home is burned by a Union soldier with a grievance against Capt. Cary, a Confederate scout, the soldier is shot for insubordination by his commanding officer, Lieut. Col. Morrison. Loss of their home forces Virgie (the littlest rebel) and her mother to live in a small cabin.

Shirley Temple

Shortly thereafter Mrs. Cary dies, leaving Virgie all alone between the Union and Confederate Armies. Two rescue his daughter Capt. Cary penetrates the enemy lines.

Captured by Morrison, Cary is given a pass to take Virgie back to the Confederate camp. But a brother of the soldier who burned down the Cary home, sensing a chance for revenge, reports Morrison. Both he and Cary are court-martialed and sentenced to be shot—the one as a traitor, the other as a spy.

Virgie intervenes with Gen. Grant and both men are freed and restored to their commands.

Star: Shirley Temple needs no introduction, but in case you are not familiar with the main facts of her life, here they are: Born in Santa Monica, Calif., six years ago. First picture was "War Babies," but she did not become famous until a year later when she appeared in "Stand Up and Cheer." Favorite dish is ice cream with "gravy." Overalls are her favorite costume. Leads a life much like other American girls except for a short period each day when she appears before the cameras.

'Knave of Hearts' Takes Play Award

New York City Medals Go to Jackson Heights.

A perfect presentation of a play based on the nursery rhyme, "The Knave of Hearts," brought victory to a group of New York City girls from Jackson Heights in a city-wide play tournament.

The principal parts were taken by Grace Grimsley, 12; Mary Walford, 14; Betty Felton, 14; Mary Pellegrini, 16, and Elsie Pellegrini, 14.

"The contest was between dramatic groups representing various sections of the city and the winners were each awarded a gold medal," writes Grace.

"There were five one-act plays given and the performers of each were coached by the director of the playground they represented."

BOOK OF THE WEEK

"Lona of Hollybush Creek," by Genevieve Fox. $2. Little, Brown and Company, Boston, Mass.. Illustrated.

This is a delightful story of an orphan girl in the Kentucky mountains. Adopted by Sairy Ann Hall, Lona had to start to school with pupils much younger than herself; her fear of ridicule caused her to run away.

But she came back and fought the good fight until she had won. She even revived the old art of weaving coverlets, or "kivers," as the mountain folk call them. Her "forty-nine snowballs" pattern won a prize at the state fair.

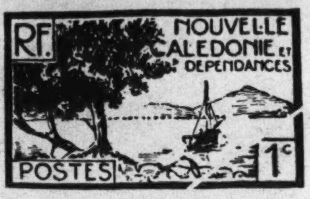
This carried her fame beyond the hills. Before long Lona had all the women and girls in Hollybush Creek busy trying to supply the demand for "kivers."

Author: Born in Southhampton, Mass., Genevieve Fox was graduated from college in 1911 but has always preferred farm life and solitude. Her work has appeared in many juvenile magazines, and she has traveled to Alaska, the West Indies and France.

She visited the Kentucky mountains and there was attracted to the mountaineers' way of living. And she still declares that, had it not been for their monotonous diet of corn bread and beans, she might have been there yet.

STAMPS and THEIR STRANGE STORIES

The Stamp—High mountains and a rugged coast indented by frequent bays are predominating features of New Caledonia, a French island about 800 miles east of Australia, as you can see by glancing at this one-centime issue. A fishing boat is anchored in the middle distance. Nearer at hand a stunted tree clings desperately to the shore.



* * * *

The Place*—New Calendonia is 248 miles long and has an average width of 31 miles. It is rich in cobalt, manganese, nickel and iron. Farm products include corn, tobacco, coffee, cotton, copra (the dried and broken kernel of the coconut), pineapples and bananas. Cattle and sheep are raised in large numbers.

* * * *

The People—Like most other South Sea islanders, the natives are Polynesians, closely resembling the Hawaiians. Called Kanakas, they are fine farmers and laborers and import and export over $2,000,000 worth of produce yearly. The whites are mostly French. On the island there is a penal settlement of some 2,000 convicts.

(N)ice Man.

The ice man was first startled, then angry as he saw a little boy perched on a cake of ice in his truck. "Hey, get off there!" he roared.

The boy looked up at him pleadingly. "Mister," he asked, "were you ever a boy?"

"Of course. But what's that got to do——"

"And did you ever play hookey from school?"

"Yeah, but you get off my ice before I——"

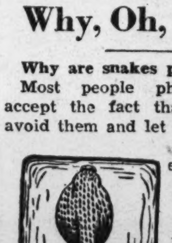
"And when you got home, did your father ever take a stick——"

"That's all right, son," cut in the ice man, "sit right where you are!"

Why, Oh, Why?

Why are snakes poisonous?

Most people philosophically accept the fact that they are, avoid them and let it go at that. But science explains why: Originally all snakes were as harmless as the innocent little garter snake. Even the deadly mamba, most venomous of all, was once harmless and might have become a first-class rat-catcher if stronger enemies had not picked on it.



When more powerful animals invaded their habitat, snakes' fangs and poison sacks developed as an instrument of self-preservation.

Today they can paralyze enemies much larger and more powerful with a shot of their venom, and dine at leisure.

The MOUNTAIN LODGE MYSTERY

By DAVID WALES

Illustrated by Robert Pilgrim.

SYNOPSIS.

Tip Corbin and his sister Connie, are studying one Thursday evening early in December when their married sister, Evelyn, calls and suggests that they drive up to their mountain lodge for the week-end. The lodge is situated high in the mountains, three hours' drive away.. Evelyn's husband, Doug, finds at the last minute that he will have to work until Saturday noon, but on Friday afternoon Tip, Connie and Evelyn start for the mountains, accompanied by Dave Masters and Madge Jones, friends of Tip and Connie. Doug intends to join them the next day. It starts to snow just before they leave, but to them it then means merely a chance to go skiing. Turning off the main highway into the secondary road leading to the lodge, they are forced to stop to put on chains. The snowstorm is growing to blizzard proportions.

Installment II.

THEY tumbled out into the wintry night and put on the chains. By the time the job was finished Tip's hands were so stiff he could hardly drive, but he threw the car in gear and started slowly ahead.

The side road which led to the Corbin lodge climbed steeply into a rugged spur of mountains, twisting and turning higher and higher, until it passed the lodge almost on the crest of the ridge. From there it dove sharply downward to connect with another highway in the next valley.

Since it was a connecting link between two heavily traveled roads and a well-known short cut, it carried quite a large amount of traffic in summer. But motorists generally avoided it when the weather was bad, for it had a bad reputation, both because of the treacherous nature of the road itself and the wildness and loneliness of the country through which it passed.

* * * *

TIP had traveled the road in other years when it was snow-covered and he was confident of his ability to get through. But never had he made the trip in the teeth of what was rapidly becoming a blizzard, and it took all his attention to hold the car on the road, now a mere stretch of white between the dark borders of the trees.

They had traveled perhaps two of the seven miles before them when ice began to form on the windshield in spite of the warm air from the heater in the car. Tip picked a good place and stopped.

"I'll soon fix that," he said, jumping out. He dug down into the heavy snow of the roadside until he found a stick about a half-inch thick. Breaking it off he lifted the left side of the hood and inserted the stick as a wedge under the rear edge.

"There," he said, climbing back into the car. "That stick holds the edge of the hood up and lets warm air flow up from the motor and over the windshield. That will keep the ice off. Dad showed me that trick last winter."

* * * *

"NEAT," commented Dave. He paused for a moment, then added fervently, "I certainly hope we get there pretty soon. I'm so hungry I could eat a horse—and an old, tough horse, at that!"

Dave's words released a chorus of groans from the back seat. "We've just been sitting back here," protested Madge, "trying to be brave and noble, and not even thinking about our stomachs. And then you, Dave Masters, have to mention being hungry!"

"No wonder we're almost starved," Connie added; "it's almost 7:30 and we haven't eaten since noon."

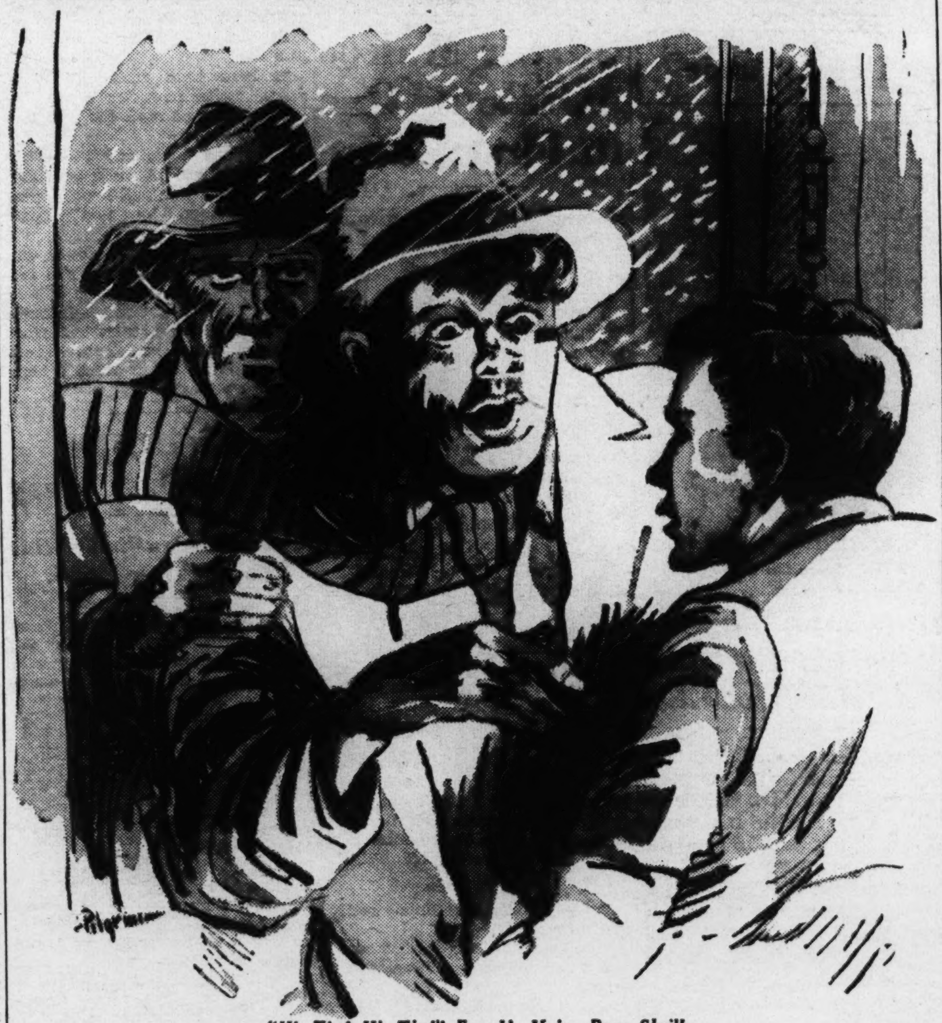
"Go on!" retorted Tip. "I saw you sampling all that food in the kitchen before you brought it out to the car. Well, if you say the word we can stop and get something to eat out of the trunk."

"Oh, no, Tip," Evelyn protested. "Let's go on now. It's only a few miles more, and we'll have a real dinner very soon after we get there. I brought a couple of big steaks, and it won't take any time to cook them."

* * * *

THE mention of steaks brought another chorus of groans, but they decided to keep on, planning on just what they would do when they reached the lodge to make dinner as quick an event as possible.

"We'll have to drive up to Wilton's to get the keys "Tip pointed out. "There will be plenty of wood there, and Dave can look after the fire in the fireplace while I get the furnace started."



"Hi, Tip! Hi, Tip!" Enoch's Voice Rose Shrilly.

* * * *

CONNIE shivered. "Maybe it's not going to be cold in that place until the furnace gets going," she said. "I hope Mr. Wilton and Enoch have taken care of getting some coal in."

Tip grunted. "If they haven't," he remarked, "we'll all be sleeping in the living room in front of the fireplace."

The others continued to chatter about the meal that was to come, but Tip fell silent again and concentrated on his driving.

In some places the snow was now almost a foot deep, and three or four inches of it had fallen over the last tire marks on this road. As a result, it was impossible to see the ruts, and he almost had to feel his way along.

But familiar landmarks told him that they were now close to their destination. Finally they topped a little rise, and Connie uttered a cry of joy as she saw two familiar mail boxes on the posts at the end of the lane.

"At last" she gasped. "And I'm actually still alive."

"Stay with me, stomach," said Madge with an exaggerated sigh. "It won't be long now!"

Tip turned the car into the narrow lane that led to the lodge, situated in a cleared space on the very edge of a low ridge.

They almost burst into cheers as they passed it, a dark shape in the midst of the surrounding snow, and continued along the road to the lights of the Wilton farmhouse. Tip sounded the horn briskly as they pulled up before the house, then jumped out and ran up on the porch, to be greeted by the boisterous barking of a shepherd dog.

The door of the farmhouse opened and a grizzled man peered cautiously out.

"Tip!" he exclaimed. "You up here on a night like this? Come in, come in!"

"I just want the key, Mr. Wilton," said Tip quickly. "I've got my two sisters with me, and a couple of friends. We're going to be up over Sunday."

"Just a minute." The tall, weather-beaten farmer hastily crossed the room and got the key to the lodge. Then he came out on the porch, and Tip inquired about coal and wood. He was pleased to learn that everything at the lodge was in readiness for visitors.

"I'll bring over some milk and eggs a little later," said Mr. Wilton. He paused, and as Tip thanked him and started to turn away, he caught the boy's arm. There was, a strange, anxious expression on his face.

* * * *

"TIP," he faltered, "I—I guess I'd better tell you something. It's about Enoch. He—he's been sort of bad here lately."

"Oh!" Tip paused, and peered intently at the man. Enoch was Mr. Wilton's son—a big, brawny young man of 19 or 20. For some years now, Enoch had been what people in that part of the country called "not quite right in the head."

He had suffered a head injury of some kind—Tip never had heard all the details—and while he was strong and able to work under his father's direction, he had little sense of responsibility and apparently no ability to think clearly.

* * * *

MR. WILTON, licked his lips, hesitated a moment, and then continued, "I've been having a little trouble handling him. Don't know what's come over him, but he's developed a mean streak. So I won't send him down to help you, like I usually do. It might not be just safe."

"That's all right, Mr. Wilton," said Tip soberly. "But I'm sure Enoch wouldn't cause any trouble. He knows us so well."

"Yeah, but he's actin' right queer," said Mr. Wilton, doubtfully. "Well, anyway, I thought I'd better tell ye. I'll bring down the milk and eggs myself."

* * * *

AS TIP hurried back to the car, he decided not to mention Enoch to anybody but Dave. After all, there was no sense in frightening the girls. He couldn't imagine Enoch's actually harming them, but it was best not to take any chances, and Mr. Wilton was probably wise in not sending his son down to the lodge.

In the car once more he turned it and hurried back to the lodge. They tumbled out into the biting night air and Tip quickly unlocked the door. Inside, he switched on the electric lights and hurried at once to the fireplace. A fire was already laid, and in a moment he had touched a match to it. The flames soon crackled cheerfully and began to send a little warmth out into the icy room.

Since Dave did not have to build a fire, he helped unload the car, then hurried to the little cellar where Tip was busy at the hot-air furnace. Tip told him quickly about Enoch Wilton, and then left Dave to watch the furnace while he hurried out to the pump house to start the water pump.

A half hour later, the lodge was an inviting place. The blaze in the massive stone fireplace at one end of the room was roaring, and heat was starting to come through the register from the furnace. They had opened the big storm shutters that protected the windows, and could look out at the glistening white of the driving snow. Evelyn was in the kitchen, from which came all sorts of inviting aromas, and Connie and Madge were setting the big table.

* * * *

TIP was about to run down to the cellar for another look at the furnace when there came a firm knock on the front door.

"That must be Mr. Wilton, with the milk and eggs." he said, crossing the living room at a trot. He pulled the door open, and for a moment he was blinded by the snow.

Then he was looking into the anxious eyes of Mr. Wilton.

"Me and Enoch brought the stuff down, Tip," the farmer said. Then he lowered his voice to a whisper. "I couldn't keep him from comin'. He's been awful ugly tonight."

Then for the first time Tip saw that Enoch Wilton was standing just behind his father. He was a burly, powerful young man, with long arms and huge hands. Now he stepped forward, and thrust out one of those hands, incased in a heavy woolen glove.

* * * *

"HI, Tip. Hi-Tip, hi-Tip, hi-Tip," he repeated in a sing-song voice. Tip caught his breath sharply, and peered into Enoch's face. The youth's eyes glittered strangely, and there was a vacant, twisted smile playing about his mouth.

"Why, hello, Enoch," said Tip as naturally as possible. "Bad storm, isn't it? Won't you come in?"

"Oh, no, no!" said Mr. Wilton, hastily. He thrust the milk and eggs into Tip's hands, caught Enoch by the arm, and pulled him away from the door. With an angry snarl, Enoch twisted loose from his father's grasp.

"Hi, Tip! Hi, Tip!" Enoch's voice rose shrilly. With an anxious glance back into the room, Tip hastily closed the door and shot the bolt. He could still hear Enoch's weird chant, mixed with the howling of the wind, as he walked toward the kitchen.

* * * *

DAVE'S face was serious as Tip came back into the living room, but Tip signaled him to say nothing. A few minutes later dinner was ready, and they gathered around the big table of rough planks with cries of pleasure.

In an amazingly short time the two thick steaks, and everything else in sight, had disappeared. By the end of the meal, it was warm enough in the room for them to remove their outer coats. The girls began to clear the dishes, and Tip made another excursion to the cellar to look at his fire.

He had just come back up the stairs when there came a frantic pounding on the front door. Tip's eyes darted to Dave's face with a glance of apprehension. For a moment they stood motionless. Then, as the pounding on the door continued, they walked slowly toward it, alert in every muscle for an emergency.

Tip shot the bolt back and opened the door cautiously. Then he stepped back with a cry of surprise, flinging the door wide. A man, carrying a woman in his arms, staggered across the threshold. He was covered with snow, and his face was haggard with fear and fatigue.

"Our car stalled," he gasped, lowering the woman into a chair. "I thought we'd never find shelter!"

Air Careerist.

Parade: I'd like to have an air career. Can you give some idea of what the best job is?

JAMES TAYLOR.
Chambersburg, Pa.

The most active job, and probably the most exciting, is that of pilot. Through the average pay of airline pilots is over $500 a month, this is not high since the training and flying time necessary to get the job may cost as much as $5,000. But an airplane pilot's job is an open door to better paying executive positions.—Ed.

Egg-Layers.

Parade: I've heard there is an animal that lays eggs. Can you tell me what it is?

FLOSSIE FRAZIER.
Hallowell, Kans.

There are two such animals—the duckbill and the echidna. Both live in Australia. The duckbill lays her eggs in a nest and hatches them like a bird, but as soon as the little ones appear she places them in a pouch on her stomach. The echidna puts her eggs in the pouch as soon as they are laid. Both are sole survivors of a race of egg-laying mammals called monotremes which once lived in all parts of the world.—Ed.

Spice of Life.

Parade: Thank you very much for awarding me a prize for my "Now I Know." I find Parade arouses interest in the boys and girls of America and stimulates a sense of keen competition which is the spice of life through its contests and news stories about others who are "doing things."

WILLIAM TILLINGHAST, JR.
Lorton, Va.

Doubting Thomas.

Parade: Are all of the ideas illustrated in your "Now I Know" true? One in last week's Parade about fish that burrow into the mud and are caught by natives in the Gran Chaco with spades is almost unbelievable.

FRANCIS JACKSON.
Morgantown, W. Va.

It's no idle observation that things that are true are often hardest to believe. The "Now I Know" which you mention was double checked in "Webster's Universal Encyclopedia" and in the "National Encyclopedia." Every prize-winning contestant must state his authority for the idea. The idea is verified in our own library. If necessary, we even call upon one of the world's most complete storehouses of knowledge — the Library of Congress.—Ed.

Reporter in Action.

Parade—I noticed an answer to a letter from Gerald Kiley, of Cherrydale, Va., in this column several weeks ago, saying Parade would welcome news stories sent in by readers. I am submitting a story about Harry Stanley, of Thurmont, who has earned his way through high school by painting signs for merchants. Will you send me a reporter's card and booklet making me a correspondent on Parade's national news staff?

ERNEST HITCHENS, JR.
Box 34, Thurmont, Md.

Ernest's story about Harry Stanley appears in this issue of Parade. Ernest has been sent a reporter's card and booklet and a nice check to pay him for his efforts. Read Ernest's story on page 2.—Ed.

Cats Turn Fish Fire Into a Cat-astrophe

A recent Chicago fire could rightly be called a cat-astrophe.

For cats—great numbers of them—came hard upon the heels of fireman called to quench a blaze in a shanty used for smoking fish.

Too many cats spoiled the laying of hose lines, so the fireman had to turn water on the hungry cats before they could begin on the fire.

Sharks Are Useful!

Sharks are good for lots of things besides scaring bathers. Leather is made from the shark's skin; its head furnishes glue; its bones, fertilizer; its organs, oil; and its ferocious-looking teeth, cheap jewelry.

Water Racer Captures Lipton Trophy

Lewis Carlisle Poses in a Trophy-Taking Speedboat.

Retires With 25 Speedboat Wins in Year

With No More Worlds to Conquer, Turns to Aviation.

Having won everything on water, Lewis Carlisle, of East Islip, Long Island, N. Y., is seeking new worlds to conquer in the air.

But Lew's outboard motor victories, which culminated in capture of the Sir Thomas Lipton Trophy and a new world's speed record of 61.448 miles per hour, weren't won in a day.

"I have been racing for four years," writes Lew, "but won nothing to speak of until the past two seasons.

"I have 6 boats and 12 motors which are carried on a specially constructed truck and kept in perfect condition by two expert mechanics.

"We have raced all over the United States and Canada, and last season won over 25 meets.

"But my main interest is in aviation and I have now retired from outboard motor racing to devote more time to flying, which I hope to make my career."

Horseman Wins 15 Straight Ribbons Astride 'Hot Cha'

Rated as one of the best boy horsemen in the country, Morrison Lowe, jr., 11, Cookeville, Tenn., with his pony, Hot Cha, has won 15 straight blue ribbons.

"I have been riding since I was 7," writes Morrison. "I have a small pony which I showed at all the middle Tennessee fairs and which won wherever shown. Daddy bought the pony two years ago."

Hot Cha is a five-gaited pony. Morrison is now training a three-gaited pony.

Golfer Makes A Hole in One In First Game

Excited Over Feat, Jimmy Falls in Creek on Way to Green.

The name of a 7-year-old boy was placed among the golfing immortals the other day. Playing his first real game, Jimmy Stover, 225 Elm avenue, Hershey, Pa., stood on the tee 100 yards from the green and watched his drive plunk into the cup for a hole-in-one!

Uses Brothers Clubs.

Just to make it harder, he was playing with the clubs of his brother, Glenn, who is 18 months older.

"I never took a real lesson," writes Jimmy to Parade. "Glenn and I started swinging clubs on our lawn, where dad practices. On his last birthday Glenn got a set of clubs, and began taking lessons, and I used to watch him."

"One day we didn't have school, so we played golf on the Hershey juvenile course. I didn't start very well, took 13 strokes on the first hole. But on two holes after that I was just one over par."

Ball Rolls In.

It was on No. 7 that Jimmy really got going.

"The tee is high and I used a No. 2 iron," he says. "It was real exciting to see the ball keep rolling on the green and then fall in the cup. I must have been excited, for I fell in the creek on the way to the green!"

Fan Gets $25 on Baseball Essay

Mickie (She's a Girl!) Wins Contest Over 2,685.

Mickie Gage, 14, of 638 S. Pearl street, Columbus, Ohio, is $25 richer. She won the money with an essay on—of all things—baseball!

Mickie Gage.

"The contest was for boys and girls between 8 and 18," Mickie says. "I won out over 2,685 contestants in three States, Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky.

"The money went for clothes for my brothers and myself and bought some of our school books."

Mickie is intensely interested in baseball, has played with neighborhood friends, but has never been on a real team. However, she's hoping for a chance.

Whatever You Call It, It Sure Feels Awful

One Charlottesville, Va., neighborhood was thrown into a dither not long ago by the "catching" activities of a certain lad of that town.

The boy came home one day with a pain in the midsection, a high temperature, and other symptoms of having contracted some such high-sounding disease as poliomyelitis. At least his mother thought it might be that, for the infantile paralysis epidemic had been raging in parts of the South. She rushed him to bed, telephoned his grandmother, and sent in a hurry call for the doctor.

The neighborhood residents began running hither and thither in excitement. The grandmother arrived in a taxi and a state of agitation. The doctor came running. He examined the lad thoroughly.

Poliomyelitis? No, said the doctor. Some obscure disease with a long medical name? Sure, said the doc—unripeappleitis!

Air lines in the United States now fly 40,714,686 passenger-miles per passenger killed.

Fun Corner

The Giveaway.

An author visited a jail to get first-hand information. A few weeks later he and his son, on a train, passed the gloomy building.

"Say, Dad," piped the boy loud enough for everyone in the car to hear, "is that the jail you were in?"

Not Handy.

Jane: "Mother, you know that big plate you said had been handed down from generation to generation."

Mother: "Yes."

Jane: "Well, it slipped through the hands of this generation!"

Ready to Ride.

"So you're going to exercise by horseback riding? Ever been on a horse?"

"Why, no. But I'm a bit bow-legged."

Wait and See.

"Don't hit that ball yet," called a man on the tee, "there's a man on the fairway. Always shout 'fore' before you hit the ball if someone's in your way."

"How do I know if I'm going to hit it?" asked the beginner. "I'm no prophet."

Only Human.

Jerry: "Ma, you fooled me. That dentist wasn't painless."

Mother: "Did he hurt you?"

Jerry: "No, but when I bit his finger, he yelled."

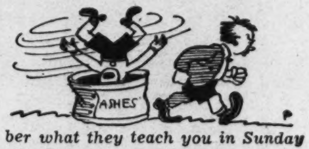
Sh-sh!

"Now that you've tried my voice," said the girl to the glee club director, "what do you think I should do with it?"

"Whisper," was the prompt reply.

Ash Him Another.

Mother was provoked. "Thomas! Just look at yourself. You've been fighting again. Don't you remember what they teach you in Sunday school about heaping coals on the heads of your enemies?"



"Sure, Mom," answered Tom, "but I didn't have any coals, so I just stuck Harry's head in the ash barrel!"

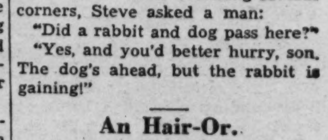
Dogging His Steps.

As Steve's pet rabbit broke away from him, a large dog bounded in pursuit. Alarmed, the boy lit out after them. After rounding several corners, Steve asked a man:

"Did a rabbit and dog pass here?"

"Yes, and you'd better hurry, son. The dog's ahead, but the rabbit is gaining!"

An Hair-Or.



Teacher: "The great men of this country don't have to take their hats off to anyone."

Pupil: "Yes they do, teacher."

Teacher: "To whom?"

Pupil: "Their barbers!"

This new Federal Building at Fairbanks, Alaska, was erected by the Procurement Division, Public Works Branch. Designed by Treasury Department architects. Walls, columns, beams, floors, decorations are all of concrete cast in one operation.

Concrete

Serves Best—Costs Least in Arctic Cold—or Tropic Heat

Federal engineers are keeping fully abreast of the great strides which have been made in recent years in concrete construction. Improved methods now make the permanence, beauty and fire-safety of monolithic concrete available at costs as low as or lower than those of competitive materials.

Architectural concrete can be placed even in sub-zero weather. The architect has at his disposal a variety of color effects as well as unmatched flexibility of contour.

Before you erect any structure learn how much better it can be built of concrete. Check against its low original cost the superiority of architectural concrete in these particulars:

1. Low maintenance
2. Low repair expense
3. Continuity of service
4. Fire-safety
5. Earthquake protection
6. Termite proof
7. Sanitary
8. Adaptability to any design
9. Beauty of color and texture
10. Permanence

It is no wonder that Federal architects and engineers are approving concrete for buildings for the Army, the Navy, the Treasury Department and for P. W. A. projects in all parts of the United States. Concrete gives Uncle Sam more for his money, and it will give you more for your money, whether you build a home or a hospital, a factory or a hotel, a church or a bridge.

Write for free advice or literature on any contemplated use of concrete.

WINTER
Lubrication

One of these cold mornings you'll awake to find your car covered with snow and when you step on the starter you'll either be glad you had HALEY'S lubricate it with Winter Alemite and lightweight motor oil—or sorry you didn't! For the difference between starting and failure to start lies in the difference between Summer and Winter lubricants: your battery is simply not capable of turning over a motor that is bogged down in oil as thick as molasses and transmission grease that resembles frozen butter.

The manufacturer of your car has specified the kind of free-flowing lubricant you should use in cold weather to fully protect the moving parts of your motor, gears, spring shackles, etc. HALEY'S, Washington's newest 100% Alemite station, follows these specifications to the letter! HALEY has ALL of the equipment, ALL of the lubricants necessary to assure any car of easy starting and easy riding in ALL weather! A good job costs no more than an average one.

JOHN PAUL CUCKOSCHAY, OR "BIG SKEE," AS THE SAILORS CALLED HIM, TOOK THE NAME OF JACK SHARKEY FOR HIS FIRST PRO BOUT. HE COMBINED THE NAMES OF HIS TWO IDOLS, TOM SHARKEY AND JACK DEMPSEY. HE EVEN HAD THE NAME LEGALIZED.
THAT'S RIGHT. FROM NOW ON YOUR LEGAL NAME IS JACK SHARKEY.
THANKS JUDGE.
UNDER JOHNNY BUCKLEY'S WING, SHARKEY CLIMBED FAST. HE DEFEATED SUCH TOP-NOTCHERS AS FLOYD JOHNSON, HOMER SMITH, CHARLEY WEINERT, AND HIS OLD BOSTON RIVAL JIMMIE MALONEY.

PRITHEE, SIR, WHAT MANNER OF FOOLERY BE THIS?
WELL, SIR, IT'S ANOTHER OF UNCLE FILBERT'S INVENTIONS. A MAGNET, AT THE FRONT, ATTRACTS THE CAR AND DRAWS IT RIGHT INTO THE GARAGE, IN CASE YOU ARE ABOUT TO FORGET AND LEAVE IT OUTSIDE. THEN, THE GARAGE HAS NO BACK IN IT. HENCE, IF YOU DO DRIVE THE CAR IN, AND FORGET TO STOP, YOU CAN GO RIGHT ON THRU, WITHOUT DOING ANY DAMAGE.

Apple Mary
BY MARTHA ORR
12-8-'35
SO DENNIE'S FATHER IS STILL ALIVE?
YES, BUT MARY WORTH AND DENNIE MUST NEVER KNOW IT.
I'M TO REPORT TO HIM WHAT HAPPENED TO THEM AFTER HE LEFT SIX YEARS AGO, WHEN HIS FIRST WIFE WAS KILLED—
HIS FIRST WIFE? THEN HE'S MARRIED AGAIN?
YES, AND SHE'S AFRAID MARY OR DENNIE WILL SHOW UP AND CLAIM A SHARE OF HIS WEALTH.
SHE'S PAYING ME TO TELL HIM BOTH OF THEM DIED SHORTLY AFTER HE LEFT.
SUPPOSE MARY STARTS INVESTIGATING FOR HERSELF?
I TOLD HER THE MONEY I'M SENDING IS FOR DENNIE'S SHARE OF HIS FATHER'S ESTATE. SHE WON'T INQUIRE INTO THAT.
AND THERE'S NOTHING IN THIS FOR YOU JACK LAIRD!
NO? IT'LL BE WORTH PLENTY TO THIS PRESENT MRS. WORTH TO KEEP ME QUIET.
DON'T BLACKMAIL HER. SHE'S BAD BUSINESS.
I'LL SOON FIND OUT ABOUT THAT. I'M GOING TO SEE HER.
DON'T DO THAT! SHE'LL KNOW I'VE TOLD YOU EVERYTHING. I WON'T DARE FACE HER.
YOU NEEDN'T. YOU'RE GOING ON A LONG TRIP.
AND I'LL GO OVER AND SAY GOOD-BYE TO APPLE MARY AND DENNIE. NO HARD FEELINGS. HA. HA.
BUT IF MARY DOESN'T GET THE MONEY I PROMISED HER, SHE'LL START LOOKING FOR ME—
MEANWHILE TO MARY AND DENNIE, THE FUTURE LOOKS VERY ROSY.
SURE MAKES A DIFFERENCE, KNOWING THERE'S SOME MONEY COMING IN.
YEAH, YER LOOKIN' PURTY CHIPPER.
IF I JUST KNEW WHAT JACK LAIRD WAS DOING. HIS SILENCE WORRIES ME.
HUH, YER WORRIES ARE OVER THEN, 'CAUSE HERE HE COMES.

WINNIE THANKED MR. ROLAND ROYCE WHO HAD SO GALLANTLY RETRIEVED HER PURSE FROM A SNEAK THIEF. SHE THEN WENT ON HER WAY TO BUY PERRY'S NEW BICYCLE FOR CHRISTMAS.

BEFORE LONG SHE HEARD A CHILD CRYING. TURNING, SHE SAW A GIRL SOBBING, AND WITH HER A WOMAN, BOTH IN RAGS. WINNIE APPROACHED THEM AND ASKED WHAT WAS THE TROUBLE. THEY SAID THEY WERE PENNILESS AND STARVING.

WINNIE TOOK THEM TO A SHOP AND BOUGHT NEW CLOTHES FOR BOTH OF THEM AND FOR THE LITTLE GIRL SHE BOUGHT A NEW DOLL.

I MEAN STUFFY FROM HEAT.
THE HOUSE HAS BEEN LIKE AN ICE-BOX ALL DAY. I'LL ADMIT IT'S NICE AND WARM NOW.
WELL ANYHOW, I'LL LOWER A WINDOW FOR A WHILE.
THERE, THAT'S BETTER NOW.
WELL JO, I TALKED WITH A MAN TODAY WHO MAY BE THE NEXT MAYOR. HE SAID GEORGE...
THAT COLD AIR IS SO REFRESHING... WE'D BETTER HAVE MORE OF IT.
I'LL OPEN THE WINDOW WIDER.
WIDER! WELL... AH KA CHOO!
SUCH CRUST! OPENING THAT....
AH, KA CHOO!
KA CHOO! SHE'S AT THE WINDOW AGAIN....AFTER HEARING ME SNEEZE MY HEAD OFF.... OPENING IT WIDER.

FINE! A SWEATER, COAT, TWO PAIRS OF TROUSERS...OPENING WINDOWS IS ALL OKE WITH ME, SISTER BUNGLE.
WHOO! A WHILE AGO I WAS REALLY CHILLY. NOW I'M GETTING TOO WARM. FEVER, MAYBE.
LET ME THINK...I'LL CATCH COLD IF I TAKE ANY OF THIS STUFF OFF WHILE THAT WINDOW IS WIDE OPEN.
IT'S FEVER. I CAN FEEL IT ROLLING OVER ME IN WAVES.
SUCH HEAT....CAN'T STAND... HAVE A NOTION TO JUST CLOSE THE WINDOW AND....

A. A. MILNE

ONE day A. A. Milne sat in his living room with his little boy, Christopher Robin. "Please tell me a story", said Christopher; and Milne did, and that was the start of these books. Then, Christopher's friend, Pooh, appeared; then little Piglet and gloomy Eeyore and Kanga and all the others. And they all had to have stories told about them. So pretty soon four books had to be made to hold all their adventures and talks and hums and songs and things. Now here they are for the first time in new editions at $1. each.

THE first stories (WHEN WE WERE VERY YOUNG) in verse, are mostly about Christopher Robin, who tells you all about his adventures and his many friends—"Ernest was an elephant, a great big fellow, Leonard was a lion with a six-foot tail, George was a goat, and his beard was yellow, and James was a very small snail." You'll love, too, the one about three foxes "who didn't wear stockings and they didn't wear sockses." And, "James James Morrison Morrison Weatherby George Dupree. Took great care of his Mother, Though he was only three."

NEXT came (WINNIE-THE-POOH) —adventure stories about Pooh, Piglet, Kanga and her baby, Roo; they go visiting to Rabbit's house; Piglet goes hunting Woozles, Eeyore loses a tail—Pooh finds one. Piglet meets Heffalump. Eeyore has a birthday and Pooh discovers the North Pole. You'll read these over and over.

THEN came another (THE HOUSE AT POOH CORNER) that picks up where WINNIE-THE-POOH left off. They build Eeyore a house. Tigger climbs a tree. Eeyore finds the Wolery and Pooh introduces his famous OUTDOOR SONG that goes: "The more it snows, tiddely-pom, etc." You'll be humming it before you're halfway through.

THE last book (NOW WE ARE SIX)—came as Christopher Robin started to school. It is chock full of more enjoyable poems about, "So that's what I make when the day's all wet; It's a good kind of brake but it hasn't worked yet." Also, "I think I am an elephant behind another elephant, behind another elephant who really isn't there." And the old sailor "who had so much to do that whenever he thought it was time to begin he couldn't because of the state he was in." And "Wherever I am there's always Pooh, There's always Pooh and me."

AFTER that Milne stopped. He never wrote another poem or story for children. Christopher by now had grown up. The incentive had gone. That's why these books are so famous—because they actually record the imagination of a child by a most skillful writer. And maybe that's why over 2,000,000 copies of these books have been sold at $2. each in less than 10 years. Here are the same books, same stories and poems, same format, same size. But in new improved extra durable washable bindings. At only $1. each.

MONSTERS OF THE PREHISTORIC PAST

FLYING LIZARDS

PROBABLY THE MOST BIZARRE DEVELOPMENT ATTAINED BY THE SAURIANS, DURING THE AGE OF REPTILES, WAS THAT OF THE FLYING LIZARDS. MOST OF THESE REPTILIAN INVADERS OF THE AERIAL DOMAIN WERE QUITE SMALL, AS IS THE SPECIMEN ILLUSTRATED HERE. HOWEVER, ONE GROUP, KNOWN AS PTERANODONS, GREW TO BE ENORMOUS - WITH A WING-SPREAD OF NEARLY THIRTY FEET. WHILE OUR PRESENT DAY BIRDS UNDOUBTEDLY ARE OF REPTILIAN ORIGIN, THE FLYING LIZARDS POSITIVELY WERE NOT A STEP IN THEIR EVOLUTION.
